EX-PRESIDENT ARTHUR.

The death of Mr. Arthur, ex-President of the United States, is announced in our telegraphic columns this morning. His demise at a comparatively early age will be sincerely regretted wherever his name is known. Although not to be ranked among the great men of the time, Mr. Arthur nevertheless possessed striking individuality, and in virtue of the exalted position he attained in the Government of his country ensured for himself a place in the national history. The Presidency of the American Republic is one of the highest honours to which man can aspire. The occupants of the White House at Washington have now and again been politicians of indifferent character and inferior capacity, but generally they have been supremely worthy of the trust reposed in them. Some of them, indeed, have reflected a lustre on the manhood of the world, in comparison with which the fierce light that beats upon a throne could reveal nothing purer and nobler. Nowhere has the unison of simplicity and dignity been more conspicuous that among these western rulers. Their upbringing in a society exempt from the irksome and cramping constraints of older communities and more exclusive forms of government has doubtless conduced to this end. The boasted free life of their country has imparted a brightness even to politics, without necessarily entailing a descent to license and turbulence. Seldom, at all events, has the chief of the State so demeaned himself as to merit the opprobrium and resentment of his fellow citizens. Rather has he conducted himself somewhat in the fashion of an English judge, who, on his elevation to the bench, bids farewell to the din and strife of parties in which he has perchance been an active participant. Still there is a significant difference. Throughout his term of office the President is commonly regarded as the rallying point of a party, whereas in monarchical countries the Sovereign is looked upon as above all party. The "spoils to the victors" doctrine has done much to perpetuate this partisan bias, and it will be well for American political life when things are so ordered, by the carrying of sweeping refoms, that this humiliating stain will be for ever removed from the escutcheon of the White House. These observations are suggested by the recollection of Mr. Arthur's struggles to prove that he ceased to be the leader of a faction when he became the accepted ruler of the people, albeit he owed his elevation to an accident, and not to the direct suffrages of the nation, which, nevertheless, in according him the Vice-Presidency, frankly acknowledged his ability to take the highest position if called upon. Now that he has passed away, the consensus of opinion will be that he fulfilled the duties of a most trying situation at a most critical time with becoming fitness, adroitness, and statesmanlike authority.

Chester Allan Arthur was born, according to one account, in Franklin County, Vermont, on October 5, 1830, while according to another he was born a year later at Albany, in the State of New York. He was of Scottish descent, and his father was pastor of Baptist churches in Vermont and New York. Great pains seem to have been bestowed on his early training, for we find him a B.A. of his college, and in the practice of the law in 1850. He had no up-hill fight such as fell to the lot of his predecessors, Lincoln, Garfield, and Grant. From the outset he trod the path to professional, if not to political, distinction. A career of this kind is rarely chequered by the vicissitudes that give almost a romantic colour to the stories of "men who have risen" without any advantageous environment on the threshold of life. Young Arthur soon evinced a strong predilection for politics. He at first belonged to the Whig party, but on its formation joined the Republican party, and ere long came to the front as a leader in New York. When the civil war broke out he was entrusted with the equipment and provisioning of troops raised in that State, and speedily rose to the rank of quartermaster-general. After the war he again actively engaged in the pursuit of his profession till 1872, when President Grant appointed him collector of the port of New York. This post he held till July, 1878, when he was removed by President Hayes on the ground that he stood obstinately in the way of Civil service reforms. He had still the law to fall back upon, and when raised to the Presidency he was head of the legal firm of Arthur, Philips, Knevals, and Ransome. Prior to the memorable election of 1880, when dissensions arose in the Republican party, Mr. Arthur sided with the "Stalwarts," in opposition to the Independents. At the National Convention of Chicago in that year, the "Stalwarts" were unable to put General Grant in nomination, the preference being given to a then comparatively obscure Senator, Garfield. In order, however, to bring the two wings of the party together so as the better to confront the Democrats, a "machine" politician, of the Grant-Conkling school, had to be nominated for the Vice-Presidency, and the choice ultimately fell upon Mr. Arthur. The Democrats were badly beaten in the elections for the Legislature, as well as in the contests for the Presidency, and so it came to pass that the executive and legislative branches of the American system were in harmony, as they had not been for many a day. It was claimed that the splendid triumph of Garfield proved that there was a Solid North no less than a Solid South, with a West decidedly favourable to the former. More than this, it was construed into a convincing recognition of the fact that the Republican party had governed the country so wisely that a change would have been an act of supreme folly. But, despite these io pæans the Republican triumph was really short-lived, and was, in sooth, completely overshadowed by the subsequent Democratic victory.

Although Mr. Arthur had been elected Vice-President as the representative of the "Stalwarts," President Garfield disregarded the pretensions of that faction, and refused to submit to any form of dictation. This widened the rupture between the two sections. Nor was it entirely healed by the sad tragical death of Garfield, whose cowardly assassin struck a fiendish blow in the cause of the "Stalwarts." On the death of General Garfield, Mr. Arthur became President, September 19, 1881. There was all manner of deprecatory surmises respecting his probable conduct. His promotion was viewed abroad with scant favour. At home he was reviled, and was made the object of malicious accusations, which, unfortunately, are levelled in election times at all aspirants to high office. Against this, however, it could be noticed that sectional differences did not affect his full accord with recognised authority on the national policy of his party; while, on the other hand, his reticence and dignified bearing during Garfield's illness reassured many who were prone to look askance at him. Mr. Conkling, whose defeat for the senatorship of New York State had been hailed as a virtual triumph for Garfield and reform, became Mr. Arthur's confidential adviser, and it was remarked that the new President did not in his first message to Congress carry forward the Garfield banner. He admitted that reform must come, but was not disposed to force it. On this question he indubitably both faltered and paltered. He in fact treated the Civil Service question at this time in a way that attested he was neither decided, sincere, nor earnest on the point. The fear was expressed that the pistol of Guiteau had closed for a long period the march of the social and political renovation, the general lines of which were traced by Garfield in his memorable message. There appeared little room to doubt that the accession of President Arthur, the friend and partisan of Grant, would produce a sudden and radical change in the spirit of government, thus reviving by an accident and a crime the policy so overwhelmingly repudiated by the nation. This was more than ever evident when the President proceeded to remodel his Cabinet, though in one instance, at least, the substitution of Mr. Frelinghuysen for Mr. Blaine, he acted with wisdom, and put a stop to a turbulent and aggressive foreign policy. Nevertheless, he insisted that the American Treaty with Columbia about the Panama Canal still held good, though it was inconsistent with the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. He asked Great Britain to modify that treaty, and said that he did not intend to endure any non-American guarantee of the Canal. Again, he thought the Chili-Peru war had gone so far as to injure American interests, and he sent envoys to each State to reconcile the combatants. The Arthurian Government was, however, more successful in this adventure than in impressing Lord Granville with its conception of the proper reading of the Clayton-Bulwer Treaty. In domestic matters President Arthur favoured additions to the army and a reconstruction of the navy, conjoined with the abolition of many internal duties, the reduction of duties on alcohol and tobacco, and the giving of bounties to the shipping trade—thus reducing revenue and increasing expenditure, lest the Customs duties should be reduced. This was the proper line for an extreme protectionist to take.

In 1882 the difficulty with England concerning the American suspects arose, but was happily adjusted through the diplomatic intervention of Mr. Russell Lowell. The Anti-Polygamy and Anti-Chinese Bills, which early in this year greatly exercised Congress, were chiefly important because of the new policy they introduced into the legislation of the United States. The first was designed to paralyse the power of those who upheld a notorious abomination. The contention that the bill, if passed, would destroy free government in Utah was disposed of by the reply that Mormon Government was not free, but was, on the contrary, a theocratic oligarchy of the most despotic description. The bill eventually passed as it came from the Senate, by a majority of five to one. It had the approval of the President, who felt none the less that the execution of the law would be both delicate and risky. But Mr. Arthur vetoed the Anti-Chinese Bill, on the ground that it violated the treaty; because suspension of immigration for 20 years was tantamount to prohibition; and also, because the passport system, fast disappearing even in Europe, was undemocratic and hostile to the spirit of American institutions. The veto was declared by leading American journals to be sound, prudent, and patriotic. This, in conjunction with President Arthur's demeanour in the negotiations with England as to the subjects, was accepted as a signal proof of his independence of demagogism. Notwithstanding the majorities in the Congress and the popular frenzy on the Pacific slope, the President refused to be a party to a "breach of the national faith." He had manifestly the courage of his convictions, and resisted strong popular temptations to step aside from what he deemed his duty. The New South Wales law anent the introduction of Chinamen was at that date frequently cited against Mr. Arthur's attitude.

In his next message the President showed that he had advanced somewhat in the direction of Civil Service reform. He, in fact, dismissed officials who tried to interfere with the Star Route Frauds case, a pledge of his zeal against rampant corruption; yet, withal, he was never regarded as entirely sound on this question of reform, which required the most drastic application. Still the half loaf was better than no bread. He desired that public posts should be conferred on grounds of fitness, not as a reward for services rendered to a party or a politician, and should be held on good behaviour, not on the goodwill of wire-pullers. This in itself was a slap in the face to the "machine" politicians with whom he had formerly consorted, yet all the while he leaned towards the "stalwarts," on whom he mainly relied for his re-election. His last message to the Moribund Congress was a tame affair. Nor could it well be otherwise. The Democrats had now supplanted the Republicans in the House of Representatives, forecasting the triumph of two years thence. This significant reversal of power was, no doubt, owing in some measure to President Arthur's "Stalwart" leanings and expectations, and likewise to the irritating system of administration, against which loud complaints were heard. When the 48th Congress met the President had to confront a legislature hostile to the party which placed him in power. For him the outlook was gloomy, and on November, 1883, he was out of the running, the race for the presidency being between Mr. Cleveland and Mr. Blaine, the former of whom gained a famous victory. But, after all, it has to be admitted that Mr. Arthur, succeeding by accident to the chief place in the State, discharged the duties of his office with credit and success. Previously known as a mere wire-puller, or party-manager, he rose superior to that somewhat ignoble reputation, and left power higher in the esteem of his countrymen, and better appreciated abroad than it was possible for him to be as a keen partisan. His remaining years were uneventful, and he passed away as a simple citizen who had acted a conspicuous part in the lofty stage of authority before returning to the comparative obscurity which is, strangely enough, the usual penalty of greatness in so far as retired American Presidents are concerned.

UNVEILING OF THE MONUMENT TO HENRY KENDALL.

The ceremony of unveiling the monument erected to the memory of the Australian poet, Henry Kendall, was performed in Waverley Cemetery on Saturday afternoon by his Excellency the Governor, in the presence of a large assemblage. From the entrance gates, the view of the cemetery across the grassy slopes to the ocean was bewitchingly pretty, the flowers and turf being imbued with the aspect of freshness in a pleasing degree. His Excellency and Lady Carrington, attended by Lord Bertie, arrived at 3 p.m., and were received by the mayor of the borough (Mr. W. Martin) and the Right Hon. W. B. Dalley, P.C. The vice-regal party were at once escorted to a platform which had been erected in front of the poet's grave, around which were, among other gentlemen, the Hon. H. Copeland (Minister for Lands), Sir John Robertson, K.C.M.G., Messrs. D. O'Connor, P. Hogan, E. W. O'Sullivan, and J. B. Olliffe, Ms.L.A., Messrs. P. J. Holdsworth, J. M'Laughlin, E. M'Donald, F. B. Freehill, J. T. Toohey, R. T. Orr, L. Harnett, Alfred Allen, A. J. Riley, F. J. Thomas, and E. Greville.

The site upon which the monument stands is at the north-east corner of the vault section of the Church of England burial ground, and was given by the Waverley Council for the purpose to which it has been put. A little more than a month ago, the remains of the deceased poet were removed to their present resting place, after having lain for four years in that part of the cemetery known as the selected section. The monument rises to a height of 25 feet above the adjacent pathway, and is of Italian marble. It exhibits three columns, the centre one being 20 feet high, and the one on either side being much smaller. They rest upon a bluestone pedestal, which, in its turn, is affixed to a base of blue granite inlaid with marble. Each column supports an urn upon which is depicted a scroll and some drapery. The memorial bears the inscription—"Here lies Henry Kendall, poet: Born, 18th April, 1841, died, 1st August, 1882. Some of those who loved and admired him have in grateful and lasting remembrance of his genius built this monument above his ashes." Beneath this are written the words of Shelley:—

> "Awake him not! Surely he takes his fill
> Of deep and liquid rest, forgetful of all ill."

The monument is surrounded with chains, supported by eight small iron standards. It was erected under the supervision of a committee composed as follows:—Messrs. D. O'Connor, M.L.A., Thomas Butler, Peter F. Fagan, T. J. Murray, W. Martin (Mayor), and P. J. Holdsworth (honorary secretary).

Upon Lord Carrington stepping on the platform to perform the ceremony which he was to carry out, Mrs. Kendall, the widow of the deceased, was introduced to him. Subsequently, this lady's little daughters, Persia Evelyn and Roma, handed to Lord and Lady Carrington respectively wreaths of choice flowers, Mrs. Kendall's three sons being present at the time. His Excellency then said that it was with very much pleasure that he had accepted the invitation to unveil the monument. He thereupon drew a cord, and thus displaced the two British Ensigns, two Union Jacks, and two colonial ensigns, which had obscured the masonry from view. The Governor having placed the wreaths referred to upon the monument,

Mr. DALLEY said: Your Excellency, Ladies, and Gentlemen,—I have been requested on this most solemn occasion to say a few words on the graceful and affecting work which has just been completed in unveiling this memorial which has been raised by his grateful and admiring fellow-colonists over the mortal remains of the gifted creature in honour of whose memory we stand here above his ashes to-day. We have witnessed a touching ceremonial, and, to our personal experience, a strange one—one, I think, not without its value in the testimony it affords to our spiritual growth, and, perhaps, not without its benefits to our civilisation. In a young and vigorous National life, the honours which are bestowed for public services rendered are ordinarily given to the conspicuous, the laborious, and to the living—to those who struggle and survive—who use the hour, live for it, and win their instant and fleeting reward in it. It is to the voice triumphant and to the action deemed at the time to be victorious that the prize is given. No looking before and after and pining for what is not, which, as Shelley says, make our sweetest songs of poets those that tell of saddest thought, claim our sympathy and our gratitude. The music which softly steals into the soul—which compassionates and consoles—which sings of love and pity and suffering—which tells of the anguish of disappointments—of noble aims unattained—of baulked ambitions; or which invests the common and familiar things of life with a freshness and beauty to which our eyes had not before been opened—this music is only understood at a later period—and sometimes he who gives it to the world is allowed to pass on singing through the dark unrecognised—until the sound of his voice is still for ever. And then some of those who have heard and not heeded the singer seek out his grave to adorn it. In that exquisitely artistic and musical poem of the unhappy American poet who described his worship of poesy as a life passed beside the tomb of his darling, his life, and his bride, we have, perhaps, a glimpse of the life which found peace here.

> "In the sepulchre by the sea
> In the tomb by the sounding sea."

We have not come here to-day to indulge in any elaborate criticism of the works of a man of genius. As far as we are concerned we have long passed that stage. Our action here would be meaningless if we had not felt his title to our admiration and thankfulness unassailable. Nor are we called upon to vindicate his fame or our judgment in erecting this memorial. We gratefully recognise in such work as we have received at his hands one of the great services that such ministers of refinement and tenderness as he was render to civilisation. (Applause.) What are our obligations to a man of his gifts? They are as varied as our duties, and as deep as our passions. It was one of the noblest and most patriotic of our English statesmen, Charles James Fox, who called "poetry the great refreshment of the human mind—the only thing after all—that men first found out they had minds by making and tasting poetry." If we feel—as we have felt—that we owe this refreshment to his genius, we need now do no more than express our thanks. We may indeed fondly linger for a short time (and this is perhaps our proper function to-day) over the circumstances which characterise his gifts, and invest them with a charm and beauty which make them more precious and attractive. And thus to enable you to do this, and to think of him tenderly, you must think not only of what he brings to you and lovingly lays at your feet, but of how little the asks of you in return. He invites you to look upon glades and woods and dells with his eyes, to hear with his ears what the trees are saying, and what is the speech of streams. Not from great halls of learning of the old world—from courtly society—from homes of beauty and culture does he come to you and tell you what is in his heart. But he tries to sing to you of a "river in the range" which he loves to think about, and of which he hopes that "the searching feet of change have never found it out;" and he tells you how he has longed to steal the beauty of a brook and put it in a song. It is a boy in your own Australian bush who comes to you and tells you of that screen of gold and green that shades loved places and hides secrets only known to the birds and waters. You read some of these touching pieces with a peculiar tenderness for the gifted but solitary child whose heart is so full of beauty, and of the passionate desire to speak of it. And you feel as if you could wish the young eager singer a future of peace and love and simple pleasure—saying to him, with dear Charles Lamb to Leigh Hunt's little child in prison,

> "Birds shall sing
> For thy delight each May morning."

And it is I think in all the pieces in which he shows a child's simplicity and tenderness—and sings of Nature and her mysteries of loveliness rather than of men—in those pieces written before the shadow of the prison-house had begun to close upon the young boy—it is in these that he most strongly and tenderly appeals to our hearts. His own education had been that of a child of Nature owing comparatively little to schools, systems, or masters. And even when he wrote those profound and affecting lines in which he speaks his admiration of and sorrow for the loss of the great and learned explorer who died more than 30 years before in the far interior of our country, there is a childlike conception of the culture of the distinguished man of science whose loss he deplores. It is not, he tells you, to schools or Universities—to the halls of science—or the teachings and inspirations of its professors that the education of Leichhardt is due. Not from these did he receive his vocation and hear his message. But even as in the higher spiritual world to the angelic ascetic the leaf, the bird, the blossom grew a gracious sisterhood, so the child of science kneels before his great mother and asks to be received as one of hers—and

> "So she took him—thence she loved him—
> Lodged him in her home of dreams,
> Taught him what the trees were saying,
> Schooled him in the speech of streams."

In estimating, if, indeed, we were called upon to do so, what is the value of the work that he has done—how much and how beautiful—we shall do him and ourselves an injustice to consider the question apart from his disadvantages and our situation. He is a severe and unjust, an incapable critic, who in the words of a most accomplished American, speaking of a countryman who has adorned the republic of letters, contrasts his proportions with those of a great civilisation. He goes on to point out that the flower of art blooms only where the soil is deep, and that it takes a good deal of history to produce a little literature; and needs a complex social machinery to set a writer in motion. In the very early stages of natural growth, as he wisely remarks, men do not labour to produce flowers; and the achievement of something to write about necessarily precedes the writing. To him who greets you in the morning with the sweet simple songs of the dawn, which breathe of his home and of years of hope, of boyish aspirations, you are not to close your ears to this fresh music because these are not the songs of the master spirits whose greatness has been tried by the ages. He gives you under hard conditions of his best and earliest and tenderest; and your criticism, like your gratitude, should spring from a glad and generous soul. (Applause.) It should not be disfigured by comparison with mighty works, long achieved, which have passed into the life of nations and the hearts of peoples. He himself well knew the limits of his power—and he knew and sadly contemplated the heights of glory to which, under happier and greater circumstances, he might have dared to aspire. In that most affecting dedication of his last book he paints the "fair majesty" to which he offers it, and envies the perfect rest (denied to him) which makes the heaven of the highest. He looks up with awe and love to that mountain—that

> "Stately father whose majestic face
> Shines far above the zone of wind and cloud,
> Where high dominion of the morning is."

With the humility which belongs to reverential genius he makes a poor appraisement of the sweetness of his own utterances, and tenderly and with lowly and half depreciating speech he calls his works but the "broken words of blind occasions" when the world had come between him and his dreams. He preferred no claim to be received into that majestic circle in which move the powers "capacious and serene" which rule over the souls of men. Not for him this awful companionship, and therefore not to him should be applied the inexorable laws of a criticism which compares and contrasts imperfect achievement with the glories of the great souls whose immortal faculty has dealt even with darkening and concealing interpositions, so that they became "contingencies of pomp." It is not to be wondered at that when his first verses were submitted to the judgment of English critics one of them should have immediately perceived and said that it was among Australian scenes and in describing incidents of Australian life that he was most happy—and should have selected such pieces as "A Death in the Bush," "On the Paroo," "On a Cattle Track," and "The Hut by the Black Swamp"—as essentially poetical and containing vivid descriptions of Nature. It may be remarked that there is in his formal and modest solicitation of a review at the hands of the editor of an English magazine a proof of how much he felt that with the scenes of his own life and struggles his hopes of poetic fame, however slight, were indissolubly associated. In what the "Athenæum" calls the very sensible letter with which he sends his MSS. at the close of 1865, or beginning of 1866, he says, "In my spare hours, and whenever health and the choking troubles of a really hard life have suffered me, I have written and written on, and the accompanying verses, alive as they must be with a certain intensity of feeling, and naturally shadowed with a remarkable gloom, are at least the genuine results of some of them." He says, moreover, that he is very anxious for the existence and recognition of an indigenous native literature, and suggests that the editor might devote an article to the subject. Kindly and gracefully and encouragingly does the English critic select two of the pieces sent to him to express his approval of the quality of the work; and advise him to persevere, to seek in the great life around him those human powers of humour, pathos, and beauty which, touched by the gifted hand, cannot fail to win the hearts of the public; and to use his local colouring, a precious treasure, to illustrate truths which are universal. And now we may rest with the conviction that what was urged upon him as the goal of his ambition he endeavoured to attain. Patiently—always very humbly—with hard struggles, with many sharp sorrows and bitter disappointments, amidst distresses and uncongenial employments, he kept fresh in his mind those scenes of strange loveliness which had first met his eyes and gladdened his heart—and gave the pictures of them to us as an eternal enjoyment. Of him it may be said, as Coleridge said of himself, that the scenes of his childhood were so deeply written on his mind that when upon a still shiny day of summer he closed his eyes, the river Otter ran murmuring down the room with the soft tints of its waters, the crossing plank, the willows on the margin, and the golden sands of its bed. It is but a few days ago that the country deplored the loss of a great and masterful spirit eminent in the faculty of arranging and determining all the difficult and constantly-recurring questions which press for settlement in a complex state of civil society. In an instant that great sentinel of order was relieved from duty and passed into a repose as calm as the sleep of the poet who lies here. Both, differing so much in life, will be tenderly remembered—for in the one case you think gratefully of the life of ceaseless labour in the highest walks of intellectual excellence, of the clear eyes perforce turned away from the spiritual forms and lovely images of the imagination; and in the other you cherish the gentle memory of the childlike genius who loved the beautiful and lived to try and tell you of his pleasures and consolations in its worship. Before returning from this place to our ordinary functions let us express our sense of the graceful and sympathetic action of the head of our society—who has adorned his great office—and of the kindly action of the distinguished lady who has accompanied him, for they have deeply gratified us who are present, and tasted, I feel sure, a pure pleasure in helping by their presence to honour the favored and beloved memory of a humble child of genius.

On the motion of Mr. O'CONNOR, seconded by Mr. MARTIN, a vote of thanks was accorded Lord and Lady Carrington for their presence.

In reply to the sentiment, his EXCELLENCY said he regarded it as a compliment to have been asked to unveil the monument to the memory of one who held so high a place in the literary world. He had been gratified to learn that shortly after the death of Henry Kendall, the Government of the day had placed at the disposal of the widow a position of trust. He was pleased, too, that the eldest son had been very carefully looked after, and he also expressed the hope that the brothers and sisters of the deceased would not in the future be forgotten.

THE POLITICAL SITUATION.

THE PREMIER AT DUBBO.

On Saturday morning Sir Patrick Jennings proceeded by special train to Dubbo. He was accompanied by the Hon. J. Want, Attorney-General, and Mr. G. E. Cass, one of the representatives of the Bogan. The same evening the hon. gentleman delivered an address in the Masonic Hall, Dubbo, on the political situation. The chair was taken by Mr. Narcisse Muller, mayor of the town, and there was a large attendance of electors.

Mr. MULLER briefly introduced the Premier. He explained that the Premier had travelled a long way to meet his constituents, and he felt it his duty to do so to address them before anyone else on the present political situation. He asked them to give the hon. gentleman a fair hearing, though he thought it was scarcely necessary for him to do that, because his experience, which extended over many years, convinced him that the people of Dubbo were willing to extend fair play to any person who desired to address them on public matters of importance.

Sir PATRICK JENNINGS, who was received with cheers, said that he quite agreed with the sentiments enunciated by the mayor, when his worship said that it was almost unnecessary for him to ask them to grant him or any other man in his position a fair hearing, because he knew they would do it. Whatever their sentiments might be with regard to his policy, or the policy of the Government, at least, when he went there to speak to the country from that platform, they would give him a hearing which would be a credit to them. He did not mean to dwell further on that point. He did not for a moment imagine but that they would give him that sympathetic hearing which he had always had at their hands since he had the honour of being elected by them. (Hear, hear.) He had gone there that night at a peculiar and critical time, and in circumstances which had never quite occurred in the history of the colony before, and he wished to explain what the peculiarities of those circumstances were. There were a number of the politicians of the country who were opposed to the Government, and who had taken the most extraordinary course of petitioning the Governor to dissolve Parliament. (Cheers.) It was a most extraordinary and unheard of circumstance in the history of the colony. These gentlemen had waited on the Governor that day, and he had to inform the meeting that his Excellency, with his knowledge of what was really the spirit of the English Constitution, with his long parliamentary experience as a member of the British House of Commons and as a member of the British House of Lords, had not seen fit to accede to the request for a dissolution. (Cheers.) He, himself, was not personally a bit afraid of a dissolution. He would be quite willing to go before the electors of that district to-morrow. He feared no dissolution, but when he told them that he feared no dissolution he thought a dissolution ought to be brought about in a proper, orderly, and constitutional way, and that was by submitting a great question of policy to the people. He had gone before them sometime ago and declared what the policy of the Government then was—the Government which had to take office in the most exceptional circumstances that ever occurred perhaps with regard to any Government before. That Government had to bear the burden of a heavy deficiency in the revenue, which had been bequeathed to them, and they set themselves resolutely to frame a scheme of taxation to endeavour to retrieve the credit of the colony, and to meet the deficiency, and they did so with the most honest desire that the burdens of taxation should fall equally on all classes. [A voice: Have they done so?] In order to show what the policy of the Government was, he would recall to the minds of his audience the words which he spoke to them when he went there and addressed them in March last as Treasurer and Premier. It was proper for him to do so now, because his task there was to vindicate the conduct and policy of his Government, to show that they had not in any way varied from the professions he had made when he went before them, and to point out that they had adhered to their policy, and intended to adhere to it. He had said that they intended to submit taxation of a double character, that while they would endeavour to derive from property its just contribution to to the revenue, they would have recourse also to the Custom House. He said:—"I have intimated already in my address to you on my assumption of office that the system of taxation which we will submit will be of a double character—that, while we shall endeavour to derive from property its just contribution to the revenue, we shall have recourse also to the Custom House, in order, as I have said, to raise the amount necessary for the exigencies of the situation. It will be well that I should cause it to be clearly understood that there is no intention on the part of the Government to fall in with the views of those who would take advantage of our present situation to tide us over a temporary difficulty by disregarding the leading principles upon which alike the fiscal policy of the country and its present prosperity have been for a considerable time based." What he meant by that, and what he wished to explain, was that that policy intended was no departure from the fixed policy of the country. He was perfectly aware that in endeavouring to carry out that policy they had been met by objections and difficulties, and that they had not been able to carry it out as it was sketched. There was nothing more difficult for any Ministers to undertake than to go into power at a time when the exchequer was deficient, and an appeal had to be made to the constituencies to bear the burdens of fresh taxation. It was a difficult work, it was an unpopular work, and it was one which, from its very nature, was likely to meet with a great deal of opposition from all sides. In undertaking so difficult a task the only sentiment by which the present Ministry were sustained, and by which he had himself felt sustained, was that they were doing their duty to their country. He would ask them to allow him, seeing that they had undertaken this difficult and unpopular task, to compare the circumstances and condition of matters under which he took office with those of preceding Governments. He would not go back more than to the Parkes and Stuart Governments. In looking over the records he found that the last Parkes Government came into office on the 21st December, 1878; and when Mr. Watson, the Treasurer of that Administration, made his financial statement, on the 12th February, he showed that the preceding Government left him a clear surplus of £2,474,000. The Stuart Government came into power on the 5th January, 1883. Mr. Dibbs, the Treasurer, made his financial statement on the 7th February following, and showed, by the accounts submitted, that the Parkes Government had left them a surplus of £1,846,239. When the Jennings Government came into power they found that the deficit, at the close of 1885, was £1,309,000. His Government then had to face the difficulty of dealing with this enormous deficiency, and he thought they were entitled to the patriotic consideration of every man in the colony, if they were honest and earnestly desired to get rid of that deficiency, and retrieve the credit of the colony both at home and abroad, and not to allow any unnecessary distress to exist in the colony for the want of employment. (Hear, hear.) He had made this comparison because he believed that it justified the claim of the Government to a great deal of consideration. He was not there to blame this or that Government, or to dwell on the past. They had to deal with the present and the future, which were of infinitely more importance to them. They must deal with the problem as it was before them, and he invited their attention, sympathy, and support in the matter for the government of which he was the head. It became, then, the duty of the Government to submit measures to endeavour to, as far as possible, retrieve the condition of affairs that existed. They had to meet an unprecedented amount of difficulty and delay in endeavouring to carry their measures into law. In the earlier part of the session, when Sir John Robertson was at the head of the Opposition, there was not much obstruction, difficulty, or delay with regard to the conduct of business in the House. When that hon. gentleman retired, however, and the present leader of the Opposition succeeded him, a very different state of things occurred, and it was often found that there was an organised system of delay, hindering, retarding, and obstructing in regard to public business, which led to a long, weary, interminable, and unsatisfactory session, which had, he was afraid, lowered the character of the House in the eyes of the country and in the eyes of the adjoining colonies. He grieved to think that they should have to reflect on the conduct of their parliamentary affairs. Members who were elected by the people ought to feel the responsibilities cast upon them, and represent them fairly and honestly without unduly obstructing business. He hoped that in the future no recourse would be had to such obstruction with regard to any Government, and that they would adhere to the principle that where a Government had a majority in Parliament, it should not be wilfully hindered by those opposed to it. (Cheers.) The methods by which the Government had endeavoured to restore the finances of the country to their normal proper condition were embodied in a statement made by him to Parliament, and consisted mainly of four proposals, which were in accord with the original statements made at his nomination, that there should be so much obtained from Customs, so much from property, so much from income, and so much from stamps. Now the whole of these proposals were practically endorsed by the House, and each of the resolutions embodied in them was carried by a large majority in Committee of Ways and Means; and that in any other country, and particularly in a British Parliament, would have been looked upon as a moral endorsement of the scheme of taxation which had been submitted. He knew that it had a great effect outside the country, as showing to the world, and the money markets of the world, that they were determined to maintain their credit and to pay their way. They could tell that by the floating of a loan during last July in the London market. It had been fairly assumed that the patriotism of hon. members, and of the country generally, would permit these measures to be carried into law. He was indeed, quite sure that they would be carried into law yet, although some of them had been much delayed, partly by the action of the Assembly, and partly by the action of the Council, he had no doubt that there was a sufficiently strong patriotic spirit existing in the country not to resist a fair scheme of taxation, and he would tell them that night that the scheme of indirect taxation that was carried had been of considerable benefit to the country, and that he was morally bound to go on with the scheme for the taxation of property and incomes. He was willing to abide by this, and to appeal, if necessary, to the country on it. (Cheers.) The Government would be worse than cowards, they would be craven to their principles, if they did not to the last effort fight to carry out what would be not only a great help to the revenue, but what was also the enunciation of a great principle, that the wealthy classes should not go scot-free, while the poorer classes, the working men, the toilers of the country, had to pay so large a share of taxation. (Cheers.) He must boldly and unhesitatingly assert the willingness of the Government to stake their existence on bringing that scheme of taxation into force. He would go further, and say that the sense of fairplay and uprightness in and out of the Assembly could not possibly permit so eminently fair a proposition to remain long out of the statute-book of this land. He had alluded to these facts in connection with the session which had just closed, but he should have to ask those present for leave to trench on their time and on their patience by referring to matters peculiarly within his own province, with regard to the financial condition of the country, which he wished the whole of the colony should be made acquainted with. Before he came to the figures, however, he would recount the difficulties they had to face in getting their taxation measures brought to any head. In the first place, it was proposed to increase the revenue by the imposition of an additional stamp duty, principally of the probate duties. The Act had for its object the compelling of large estates to pay in proportion to their value. There had been no particular dissension with regard to the principles of that Act, but there had been great difficulties in getting it through both Houses of Parliament and passed into law. He had to introduce it three times before it was passed. The Assembly could not permit the action of the Upper House in endeavouring to alter a money bill, and the bill was laid aside and a new one introduced. For the second time the Stamp Duties Bill was introduced. It was altered again, and was again laid aside by the Assembly; and it was only after it had been introduced the third time that it was passed through both Houses and became the law of the land. He mentioned this only to show that the accusation which had been brought against the present Goverment of being dilatory was not a just one. With regard to that particular small Act, the measure had to be read three times in both Houses, and he thought he could fairly say it was not the fault of the Government that so much time had been consumed over so small a measure. He would take another bill, which had become the law of the land, and that was the Customs Duties Bill. A certain section of the Opposition had conceived it to be their duty to oppose the passing of that bill; and, as a matter of fact, the present leader of the Opposition declared that it should never be allowed to pass. The consequence of this had been that days and nights were literally consumed in the Assembly by obstruction. There was, indeed, one continuous sitting of 56 hours before the Government could press the matter through committee. Now, he had no desire to limit the right of anybody to free speech, and he must acknowledge that although the House had so long a sitting as 56 hours, it had not exceeded what had been done in other colonies, because he found that in New Zealand they once sat from Wednesday till Saturday, and so were ahead of this colony, and he was willing that they should remain ahead of it. (Laughter.) Nothing, however, could possibly justify opposition of this kind unless it was based upon some great principle, and he contended that the opposition to the Customs Duties Bill was not based on such a principle. A large amount of contention had gathered round the question as to whether the bill meant protection or free trade. He honestly avowed that it was not his intention to interfere with the fiscal policy of the country. He intended to hold to that. He was aware that it would be a proper thing to go before the country, and allow their constituents to settle the question if it were raised; but he refused to assent to the idea that a 5 per cent. duty for revenue purposes was protection at all. An amusing part of the matter was that the present leader of the Opposition, who objected to this ad valorem duty, had himself avowed that a 5 per cent. duty could not be considered protective, and those present knew very well that it was not protective. It was levied absolutely for revenue purposes, and it was a most fictitious way of dealing with the whole subject to raise the question of free-trade or protection on the bill at all. It had, however, been made a battle cry, and because certain gentlemen holding protectionist views supported the Government in the matter the people were told, forsooth, that it was protection. The Government did not intend to alter the policy of the country. If it were to be free-trade or protection the constituencies must be called upon to decide the point. For himself, he would claim that he had never gone beyond what he said at his nomination, and that was that there was to be no departure from the principles which had been laid down. All that the Government desired was to say that they would as free men uphold the credit of the colony, and were willing to pay their way, and able to pay it. The bills for direct taxation—the Land Tax Bill and the Income Tax Bill—were thrown out; but still it was the intention of the Government to place these important measures on the statute-book. It had been preached all over the country by so-called freetraders that in order to have free trade there must be direct taxation. He openly accused the Opposition of banding together to defeat the views which their leader had been preaching throughout the country. As long as the Government were pursuing a patriotic course, and were not guided by selfish motives, they were prepared to submit to any amount of unpopularity. If they were defeated they knew they were defeated on right, proper, and just principles, and they knew also that those principles would ultimately triumph. He would not weary the meeting with a long record of the labours of the Government during the past session, because he did not wish to dwell too much on the past. He was bound to say, however, that in the midst of their difficulties they had endeavoured to pass several useful measures into law. The Assembly had passed a most important measure with regard to patents and designs, and it intended by that measure that all the inventive genius of the country should, instead of being overloaded with expensive fees, have every opportunity of registering their patents and designs, and that every facility should be placed before the inventive genius, not only of this country but also of others. That measure, however, owing to its not being dealt with by the Legislative Council before the prorogation, did not pass into law, neither for the same session did the Noxious Trades Site Bill, nor the Factories Bill, which had been brought before the country in the interest of children, and of the hard workers of the day, and which would be, in fact, a most valuable measure and ought to be passed into law. There were other valuable proposals which the Government brought before the Assembly, all of which passed that House, but were not equally fortunate in the Legislative Council, and he really could not leave this part of his speech without alluding to the question of the railway proposals of the Government. Those railways which the Government endeavoured to get the sanction of both Houses to, had been authorised by previous Governments some years ago. In proceeding with those railway proposals the present Government was simply endeavouring to carry out the will of the previous Parliament. The Legislative Council, however, in their wisdom practically hung up the greater number of these proposals. He thought it was unfortunate that they should have done so in such a wholesale way, because it was manifest that, having received the approval of Parliament, and the money having been voted for them, they ought not to have been able to cause any cessation of employment to a large section of the working population. It was not good policy to do so, because they found that when large public works were suddenly stopped, numbers of men were thrown out of employment who pressed down to Sydney with a view to being employed by the Government in other ways. These men would be far more profitably employed in making railways right out to the interior of the country than in pressing down to Sydney and waiting there to get Government employment or to obtain food from the Government. He next desired to show what was the present financial position of the country and in what circumstances the country stood. What he wished to make particularly clear was the state of the revenue, and to show that as far as the present Government had carried on they had done everything possible that any Government could do to retrieve the revenue and were not open to the accusation that by their extravagance and their conduct of the public business they had increased the deficiency that was bequeathed to them as a heavy legacy. The increase was not due to lavish expenditure or extravagance on the part of the Government. The Government found themselves in this position that certain contracts and obligations had been entered into which must be carried on because the word of the country was pledged to them. It was, in fact, impossible for the Government to stop contracts or to interfere with such obligations, or delay, or deny or refuse payment to the public creditor in any way. It was their plain duty to pay their way. (Cheers.) He would show them by a few words and figures how the deficiency was really created and increased. When he went into office he found that the gentleman who preceded him there as Colonial Treasurer made an estimate that the land revenue for the year would amount to £2,433,800. On investigating the sources from which this revenue was to be obtained he himself made an estimate that the amount would be £2,398,800, which was £34,500 less than the estimate of Mr. Burns. He would show further on that that amount even was not likely to be received. Moreover, that the non-receipt of the land revenue which had been received by other Governments, owing to the altered policy of the country with regard to the land, had been the cause of the deficiency to a very large extent. When the Parkes Government took office in 1879 they found a surplus of £2,474,000. During their term of office (four years) they realised by the absolute sale of land the sum of £4,291,945. This amount added to the surplus which they inherited gave them £6,765,945, irrespective of other revenue. When the Stuart Administration was formed in 1883 a surplus of £1,846,239 was found. Now, if this sum were deducted from the £6,765,945, it would be seen that the Parkes Government, during a period of four years, expended £4,919,706—derived from the sales of land and the surplus which they inherited—over and above other revenue. In the following four years the sales of land only amounted to £1,649,023, which, with the surplus left by the Parkes Administration, gave £3,495,262, independently of revenue gave absolute sales of land. But the difference between the amount received by them and that received by the Parkes Government from absolute sales during a like period of four years was £2,642,922. The difference between the surplus which the Stuart Government inherited and that which the Parkes Government came into possession of was £628,761. The Parkes Government had therefore £3,270,683 more than the succeeding Governments received during the corresponding period. The existing deficit amounted to something over two millions. If the policy of absolute alienation of land had been continued by the Governments which succeeded the Parkes Government, instead of there being a deficiency now, there would have been a surplus of more than a million. During the four years of the Parkes Government the enormous sales of land realised nearly £5,000,000. He was not speaking of free selection, or conditional purchases, or pastoral rentals, or any source of land revenue except the absolute revenue from auction sales, and, after auction, selection and improvement purchases, and these enabled that Government to spend nearly £5,000,000 during their term of office, and leave a large surplus to their successors. After this period of four years there was a decided change in the land policy of the country, which the whole country had cried out for. The country demanded, then, that a stop should be put to the wholesale alienation of public land, and that policy was adopted by a vast and sweeping majority of the whole people. Whether it was wise or not he was not there to question, but he was there to state the fact that it was the almost unanimous desire of the people that the alienation of the land should be stopped, and that the Government should obtain revenue by other means. He wished particularly to draw attention to the figures he had quoted. They had undoubtedly a deficiency in the revenue amounting to something over £2,000,000. If the policy of alienating the land had been pursued they would have had £3,267,000 more of land revenue, and would have therefore that amount to cover the deficit, and about £1,000,000 besides. What did all this talk about the deficit mean? If they had not the money, they had the land. If they had sold the land, there would be no deficit. They had the estate now to pay off any deficiency they liked and make any amount of surplus they liked. He would like to show them what the increase in the deficit really was. It was not due to an increase of their expenditure, nor to their having undertaken works that were not requisite, but it was due simply to their carrying out engagements entered into by previous Governments, and to a falling-off in the revenue estimated by his predecessor and that gentleman's predecessor. In making up the Estimates for the present year, it was calculated that £350,000 would be received from auction sales of land; but it was ascertained that although the Government offered all the statutory quantity of land for sale there was no demand for it. If they were ever so willing to sell the land, they could not make people buy it unless they could afford to pay for it. Instead of the land being greatly sought after, not a third of the quantity offered by public auction had been sold. The quantity estimated to be sold was £350,000 worth, whereas the quantity sold, and that which it was estimated would be sold, during the rest of the year was £118,693 worth. That would be by far the least amount of land sold by auction in any one year. If they turned to previous auction sales they would find that from £500,000 up to £1,000,000 was obtained. This year, instead of receiving as other Governments had £1,200,000 or £1,300,000, they were only to receive £118,693, and this added £231,307 to the deficiency. Under the head of improvement and special purchases there would be a deficiency of £160,044, and under the head of deposits they would have a smaller revenue than before. Under the head of instalments, conditional purchases, there would be an increase, which, however, would account for the interest on land being less than the estimate formed in the first instance. What perhaps was a most important thing for the country to know was that the revenue for this year was exceptionally short by reason of the rental under the new Land Act not having been paid. It was estimated that the new law would bring in a very large rental from the squatters, but he thought the amount was very much over-estimated by the author of the bill when he said it would be a million and a-half or two millions a year. He did not think himself that the whole of the pastoral leases would bring in for the first five years more than £600,000 or £700,000 a-year. So far the Government had not received one shilling of the newly-appraised rentals. The rents were still being paid on the old scale, and instead of having a large sum last year and the year before, the Treasury had not benefited to the extent of one shilling under the existing law. He thought this was a subject which would bear some amount of explanation. They were asked by those who criticised the policy of the Government "why they did not gather in these rents, seeing that the law had been in operation for nearly two years." He would point out the difficulty. In the first place, when the Act of 1884 became law, Mr. Farnell, the Minister then in charge of it, having made a division of the runs, had to retire, in consequence of the Government of which he was a member having resigned office. Another Ministry came in with a new Land Minister, Mr. Abbott, who took up the question, but before he had time to deal with it effectually the Ministry of which he was a member also had to vacate office. A third Ministry came in, in connection with which Mr. Spring was the Minister for Lands, but before very long that gentleman also had to retire from office. A fourth Ministry then came in, Mr. Copeland being Minister for Lands, and that gentleman had to deal with a most difficult question—this question of appraising at a fair rental the whole of the pastoral properties of the colony. As this question had to be dealt with while all these changes were going on, and as no less than four Ministries were called upon to deal with it, need they be surprised that the consequence was that great delay took place in fixing the rentals of the pastoral leaseholds of the colony? It was, however, only fair to admit that the rentals would come in, and that they would come in next year. The non-payment of the rentals had caused a deficiency in this year's accounts, but that deficiency would be made up in the early part of next year; and it might therefore be fairly called deferred revenue only. (Cheers.) He wished to draw attention to this to show that, although this deficiency had gone on increasing, the decrease in the revenue was not an absolute decrease, because they had the land to sell another day. Then, with regard to the railway system of the colony, that also was showing a deficiency in its revenue for the present year. When it became his duty to prepare the Estimates, he estimated as fully as he possibly could the probable amount likely to be received from the railways, and he took a more moderate view, and estimated a less amount than his predecessor did. He found on going into office that his predecessor had calculated the railway revenue at £2,720,000; but, on going into the matter, he himself found that he would not be justified in expecting that amount, and he put it down at £2,502,000, which was less by £218,000 than the amount stated by Mr. Burns. He had called for a return to show whether that revenue was likely to come in. He found that it was likely to be £100,000 short of his estimate for the year, and as a matter of fact he thought it his duty to state that his moderate estimate would not be sustained. If they took the large amount of the deficiency in the land revenue, and the £100,000 of a falling-off in the railway revenue, they would see how the increase in the deficiency had taken place. It was a most important thing that the State railways should be made to pay their way and to pay interest on the money borrowed for their construction. (Cheers.) He believed, and he had avowed it there, that so long as they could borrow money to make railways that would pay interest they would be justified in constructing them. The railways were not paying interest now, and, as he had already said, the railway revenue would be at the close of the year £300,000 less than was estimated by his predecessor in office, and £100,000 less than his own estimate. Instead of being a burden, the railways must be made to pay their way; and they would be made to pay their way so far as the present Government was concerned. What were the first steps the Government had taken in the matter? His colleague, the Minister for Works, had revised the railway rates—in some cases making them higher, in some cases lower, than they were at present. That gentleman had adjusted them with the view of bringing in some £60,000 or £70,000 a year more revenue, and he might say that the revision which had taken place would not press unduly upon any section of the community. The Government, however, did more than that: they brought in a bill to put the railways under the control of commissioners with powers similar to those in Victoria. They wanted the lines conducted upon commercial principles. (Cheers.) There was a proposal in their bill which did not find great favour, and that was the appointment of an additional Minister, but the real gist of their bill was that they should get the best skill they could possibly secure to deal with the whole matter of railway management, and to make the lines pay. So surely as that bill passed, the country would shortly afterwards hear a very different account of their railway affairs. The present Government, much as they would have liked it, and much as they had desired it in the public interest, had been unable up to the present to bring in a railway policy. The railways now being completed were proposed by Sir Henry Parkes and by other Governments which had preceded the present Administration. It became the duty of every Government to carry on the lines in course of construction which had been initiated by a former Administration. All these lines had cost a great deal more than they were estimated to cost, and this Government had to undertake the responsibility of borrowing money to complete the contracts entered into by previous Governments. They had to go to Parliament for a Loan Bill, and to get an additional vote for the railway to Illawarra and Cooma and other lines, amounting to £1,500,000, which, although not inaugurated by the present Government, they rightly undertook the responsibility of carrying to completion. When those lines were finished he hoped they would be worked on commercial principles, and that they would be able to say to the money markets of the world that all the railways were paying 4 or 5 per cent. The railway revenue, he thought, might very fairly be said to be an excellent barometer of the state of the country. It was an unfailing index that they had experienced a bad time when the railway revenue fell short. People in Sydney and in the suburbs did not know that there had been such hard times in the country; but those before him knew it, and he knew it. There had been lately hard times which had brought no profit, but only loss, to the settlers on the land. They knew, however, now that the causes of depression were clearing away, and that there had been an increase in price of their principal product, and that they had grounds for expecting that the railway returns and the Customs returns would shortly show that prosperity had returned again in a great degree to the interior of the country. With regard to the question of finance, he found that the revenue estimated to be obtained from the Customs, when the financial statement was made in April, was—From Customs, £1,916,700; from excise, £131,000; add to that the sum estimated from ad valorem and increased specific duties, £368,550: total, £2,416,250. They had received to 31st October—From Customs, £1,711,380; from excise, £92,182; and the estimated receipts for November-December were £350,600: total, £2,154,162. There had been, during the present year, a considerable falling-off in the trade of the port. Sydney shipping inward showed £95,000 tons less than the preceding year. The consumption of all dutiable articles had been less than for the year 1885. He had pointed out the apparent deficiency in the land revenue and the railway revenue, and he must now add an estimated deficiency in the amount to be received before the end of the year of something like a quarter of a million of money. He wanted to know the meaning of this. He was told that, owing to the depression of trade, the purchasing power of the people had decreased; that there had been a considerable falling-off in trade, and that the shipping inwards showed a falling-off of 95,000 tons. He thought these things fairly showed that there had been a depression. He did not want to paint that depression too black; but he thought he could leave it to the judgment of his audience, as practical men, to say that when they saw a deficiency in the Customs and the railways, and in the purchasing power of the people in the acquisition of land, they would admit that the increase in the deficiency was simply due to a falling-off in the revenue. He imagined that no one would accuse the present Government of having caused the revenue to fall away, or of having created the deficit which they inherited. That was the state of the public accounts, and he was there present in order to tell the meeting, and to show them how it had occurred. It was his intention, if time had permitted, to show that, although this colony was supposed to be extravagantly governed, if it was compared with other countries, Victoria for instance, which colony was only one-third the size of New South Wales, it would be seen that the departments were, except in certain cases, less costly than those of Victoria. To make the comparison complete would take up too much time of the meeting, but there were one or two things which he thought were of great importance. If the comparison was to be fairly made between the expenditure of the two colonies, they must take into consideration all the circumstances. The expenditure here was much greater owing to the larger population, but he would show how they were obliged to spend more than was spent in the adjoining colony of Victoria. In the Department of Lands, for instance, the sum of £617,521 would be spent here during the present year, while in Victoria the amount would be £103,803. In Victoria, however, the land was nearly all alienated, but here they were commencing a new system, which so far had proved very costly, and they were actually spending, under one head, more than half a million more than Victoria. He would take next the Department of Works. In New South Wales the amount estimated for this year under this head was £1,093,927, while in Victoria it was £562,374. Here, however, there was no system of local government, and they would spend on roads and bridges, during 1886, the sum of £668,210. The Government here spent more than the Government of Victoria because the people in the shires in that colony contributed large sums towards local requirements. He did not think any subject had been more talked about, and worried about here, than that of local government. When he first appeared before his constituents he said that one of the principal objects he had in joining the Government was to endeavour to inaugurate a system of local government. He did not now think that any piece of legislation was more urgently required, or would prove a greater blessing to the country than that which would give to the people the management of their local affairs. He believed the country was pining and languishing for it. Everything had been managed from Sydney; every little public work had to be begged for by the electors' representatives in Sydney. (Cheers.) He did not think anything could be more fatal to the best interests of the country than to have a highly-centralised form of government in Sydney. It was not a subject which aroused much enthusiasm now, but when he pointed out that every other colony—Victoria, Queensland, Tasmania, and South Australia—had this system of local government, it would be admitted that it was a crying shame that they had not the same thing here; and if he remained in office he would continue to say that it was unfortunate for the people to be deterred from having local government, and from receiving what they ought to have received years ago. He hoped, too, that whoever was in power, there would not be that opposition offered to the land tax and the income tax bills that the present Government had experienced. Another phase of the subject was that when the Government came into office, although they felt it necessary to impose new measures of taxation, they also felt it their duty to meet another difficulty with regard to the financial condition of the country, and that necessity was economy and retrenchment in the public service. That the Government were pledged to. It might be asked what they were doing in the matter. It was April before he could make his financial statement to the House. For three or four months they had to carry on with temporary supply bills, and could not possibly deal with the salaries of the Civil servants. There was no time for retrenchment except in one way, and that way they at once adopted—which was to endeavour to pass a bill so that there should be no increases for next year. That although not a sweeping measure was a step in advance, and would save £60,000 or £70,000 a year. He held himself that instead of proceeding in a rash and hasty manner it was better to proceed gradually, without revolution, and without anything like a Black Wednesday, and yet with justice to all concerned, and with fairness to the country. The next step they took was to lengthen the hours of service by one hour each day, in order that more work might be done by the existing staff. (Hear, hear.) Another step which they took, and which had to be taken immediately, was that each Minister should either appoint a board to see, or see himself, where retrenchment could be effected, and where unnecessary services could be dispensed with. That was being done now in every department. It was first done in the Department of Lands, and would be continued through every department in the public service in order to cut down the expenditure in each of them as far as they possibly could. (Cheers.) The Government, perhaps, if they had been permitted, would have dealt with the question in a larger, more ample, and more scientific way. The bill they introduced contained provisions for a commission not of mere officials, but of persons of knowledge and experience outside the department, to go through the whole of the Civil Service and to inquire as to the necessity for the number of officers employed, and to report to the Government, that they might prepare a large, fair, and comprehensive scheme of retrenchment. That bill did not become law because, owing to the lateness of the period at which they would be enabled to deal with it, it was thought advisable to deal only with the question of the increase. The Government, however, intended to pursue that policy, although it could not have immediate effect. They had cut off the increases and lengthened the hours of service, and they also refrained from filling up vacancies, and he believed that the board of inquiry would be a most valuable aid in reforming the Civil Service of the country. (Cheers.) He thought that economy ought to be exercised in regard to not proceeding with certain public works. There were some works which must undoubtedly go on, such as roads, and when there was a surplus, it was legitimate enough to spend it on public works all over the country; but when there was a deficiency the Government must stay their hands, and not proceed with works on quite so liberal a scale as had hitherto been the case. They must rub on now for a little time with the public buildings they had, and those in course of erection would be proceeded with. With regard to the future intentions of the Government as to its course of legislation, he had already stated that they would introduce the Income Tax Bill and the Land Tax Bill. They had laid on the table of the House a Land Bill which contained principles which he thought eminently just and satisfactory, and this measure would be amongst the first to be brought forward next session. He thought he had impressed upon his hearers the desirableness of their having a local government bill, and he would not say a word about that beyond expressing a wish that it might be his good fortune to see it pass into law while he was in office. There was also another important measure, important as regarded the interior of the country, that ought to be brought forward next session, and that was a bill founded on the report of the Water Conservation Commission, providing for irrigation and the storage of water. He did not believe that a more important bill could be introduced, for what was the use of the land without the water? If people were to live in these dry parts of the country they must have water—water for the consumption of the people and water for the consumption of the stock; and they must also endeavour to open up the great interior of the colony by a large and liberal scheme of water service and irrigation. He thought, therefore, that they would be perfectly justified in pressing such a measure on the attention of the House and the public as one which would be as beneficial to the country as the opening up and the formation of roads. (A Voice: What about the unemployed?) With regard to the unemployed, he thought there was a tendency on the part of many men when out of employment to go to Sydney. If they would take employment in the pastoral and agricultural districts it would be better for them and for the country. It would be improper for the Government to interfere with wages that people could afford to pay those men; but a serious problem had to be dealt with. The Government found these people unemployed, and had employed them, but they had to submit to a heavy expenditure in order to provide work for them, and to keep those who were absolutely in want supplied with the necessaries of life. That was a very unpleasant state of affairs. There was, however, every sign and prospect of a good harvest in that district, and there ought to be a great deal of employment there for men. He was also told that in other districts in the interior there was plenty of employment to be obtained. The Government had been embarrassed in this matter. They could not allow the people to starve, and they had to do something for them. No Government could be so inhumane as not to alleviate the misfortunes of those people, but at the same time they considered it their duty to distribute them over the country, and that duty they were at present endeavouring to perform. He had already stated that the Government had been met by obstruction and hindrance. He found by the records that there had been three or four motions of censure levelled at the Government, all of which he had survived, for the Government had large majorities on each occasion. There had also been a most extraordinary number of motions for adjournment of the House. It was all very well to say that the Government did not get on with the business, but, as a matter of fact, while there were 72 Government nights, on no fewer than 47 of such nights there were motions for adjournment. These motions extended to midnight, and when midnight arrived the Government was asked by the Opposition to adjourn. No Government worthy of the name could assent to such a course as that. The allegations which had been made against the Government did not bear the seal of good faith. If a party were found obstructing the business of the country, and then turning round and saying that the Government were carrying on their duties in a brutal way, the fact was very apparent that that party did not wish the business to go on. He maintained that facts were altogether against those who alleged that the Government were to blame for the session having been so prolonged. The Government had done everything possible in the face of these systematic hindrances to carry on public business; and they were not to be told now that they had not done all they possibly could in the interests of the country. These allegations had been accompanied by disparaging, personal remarks with regard to himself from one or two of the leaders of the Opposition. He intended to take no notice of those remarks. If he were the incapable and incompetent person that those gentlemen believed him to be, then he was quite willing to refer that question to those who were best able to pass judgment on it, and that was to his constituents and to the whole of the electors of the country. He had never endeavoured to decry or belittle or abuse political opponents by words of studied insult, or by expressions that could be construed as proceeding from ill-will or a malevolent feeling. Let those gentlemen, however, go on as they might; what they said would not affect his course of public conduct. They might, in their own estimation, be very able critics and censors, yet he believed that the people would form their own conclusions from the public acts of a public man, and would not take into consideration any pettifogging manner in which he might be assailed. With regard to some criticism to which he had been subjected, he would like to say a few words. He was stated by a certain section of the press to have received his inspiration with regard to the celebration of the centenary from some mysterious personage. (A voice: Francis Abigail.) (Laughter.) He would not be above obtaining advice on a matter of great national importance from anyone that he thought was worthy of consideration. There was one person he had received counsel from, and he was a gentleman of high position, and had been identified for many years with the public life of the colony. That gentleman had a large personal following. He certainly did not sit on the same side of the House as himself, but he had always evinced a great deal of interest in every national matter. He would read to the meeting a letter he had received from him. It was as follows:—My dear Sir,—It may be the best that I should give you my ideas about our 100th birthday at once. Without pronouncing absolutely against an Exhibition, I do not think that would be the right thing. The Centenary celebration should not be of a character diffusive as to time or meaning, or for secondary objects. It should solely, exclusively, definitely, emphatically, and grandly mark the great epoch in Australian history, and the whole chain of ceremonials should not extend over more than 10 days or a fortnight, in order to clearly define the birth-time of British rule, the foundation of Australian Empire, and nothing else. In my judgment it would be a mistake to connect any subordinate and transitory purpose, however good in itself, with the great celebration. As to the form, I give you my ideas for what they may be worth: 1. On that day I would open a great memorial hall, say, a hall of science, to be named after the day, and to be the abode of an institution (established by law) whose continuous work should be to collect, scientifically arrange, preserve, and illustrate everything relating to the resources, capabilities, and progress of Australia. 2. I would offer a prize of 200 guineas for the best work on 'The First Hundred Years of Australia,' to be written by a native-born Australian, and published on that day. 3. I would invite all the other colonies, by representatives of their Governments and Parliaments, to the celebrations of the day, and for the entertainment of these national guests I would suggest—(a), a great banquet, 600 seats at least; (b), a grand ball; (c), a grand regatta, all the continental colonies to be invited to join; (d), excursions to the Mountains, to the Hunter districts, and to Illawarra. This is an outline of what occurred to me as a high and fitting ceremonial celebration of the day; but it would add to its moral grandeur if a united service of thanksgiving and prayer for Australia could be agreed upon, in which all the churches could take part. I should think that might be done. The national cost of these proposals, I think, might be limited to—memorial hall, £60,000; ceremonials, £10,000: total, £70,000. Yours faithfully, HENRY PARKES, Parramatta, August 7th, 1886." (Applause.) He freely confessed that he did not think they could guess where his inspiration came from until he read to them that letter. The Government were also accused of making a number of unnecessary appointments, and Mr. Abigail, who was a very industrious gentleman, thought he had made the great discovery that the Government had made 22 new appointments in the Custom House. That was perfectly correct in one way, but it was not the whole truth. When the Customs Bill became law, it was evident that some officers must be told off to collect the revenue, but when that was being done, he took care that they should be selected from those officers who were already in the service; and every one of those gentlemen was simply transferred either from the permanent and temporary staffs, and not one additional new man was put in—and the places from which they were taken should not be filled unless it was absolutely necessary. This industrious gentleman also made merry at his expense because a man who lived with him once, in his service, got a Government billet, as messenger. If that was the extent of his wrong-doing, he need scarcely ask them for their quittance. To say that he had put him into one of the new customs appointments was untrue, and an unjust accusation. The matter was a small one, but when these statements were made he felt it his duty to refer to them. He thanked them for the reception which they had accorded him, and assured them that his whole efforts would be exerted in the best interests of the country generally. (Cheers.)

Mr. WANT, in response to repeated calls, also addressed the meeting. He thanked them heartily for the reception they had given to him, especially as he was a perfect stranger. They would, he was sure, agree with him that he ought not to make a political speech to them—first, because they had just listened to a long and carefully-prepared address from his hon. colleague; and secondly, because his first duty was to the electorate which he represented, and which had always been loyal to him.

Mr. CASS also spoke briefly on the political situation.

Mr. J. C. RYRIE moved a vote of continued confidence in Sir Patrick Jennings. The motion was seconded by Mr. S. PHILLIPS, and was carried by a large majority.

THE APPEAL FOR DISSOLUTION.

In accordance with arrangements made at the meeting which was held at Milthorpe's Hotel on Friday night—a report of which appeared in the Herald—a deputation comprising between 50 and 60 gentlemen waited upon his Excellency the Governor on Saturday morning, and presented to him a large number of petitions in favour of a dissolution of Parliament. The deputation was introduced by Mr. W. Fraser Martin, and included for the most part gentlemen who had acted as chairmen at the various indignation meetings held in the city and suburbs, and also a number of others who had taken an active part in the agitation.

His Excellency the Governor received the deputation in a very courteous manner, shaking hands with each gentleman present.

Mr. MARTIN read to his Excellency the following address:—"To his Excellency the Right Hon. Chas. Robert Baron Carrington, P.C., K.C.M.G., &c., Governor and Commander-in-Chief of New South Wales and its dependencies.—"May it please your Excellency as chairman of the first great indignation meeting held in Sydney to protest against the future administration of public affairs by the present Ministry and Assembly, and praying that your Excellency, as the representative of her gracious Majesty Queen Victoria, would be pleased to exercise your prerogative of dissolution, I have the honour of introducing to your Excellency the chairmen of several meetings held in other places, or those deputed to act on their behalf. I beg leave also to assure your Excellency that this movement is in no way prompted by party considerations but is spontaneous, and influenced alone by the general interest and patriotic desire for pure and more representative legislation. (Applause.) If I might venture to give instances of the causes of dissatisfaction, I would respectfully point out—Firstly: That the deficit the real state of the finances of the country, and the necessity of new taxation were concealed from the people at the last election. (Hear, hear.) Secondly: Hustings' pledges have been openly violated, and such a course of conduct has been recommended in the Assembly by Ministers. (Hear, hear.) Thirdly: the interference in the policy of the Empire without consulting Parliament. Fourthly: Extravagant expenditure without adequate provision. Fifthly: Contracting by Ministers without the consent of Parliament. Sixthly: The general incapacity of the Cabinet to conduct the business of Parliament. (Applause.) And lastly, the general demoralisation of the Assembly. (Hear, hear.) For your Excellency's consideration we have prepared a tabulated statement showing the computed numbers present at the several meetings and the representative character and unanimity thereof. I would also beg to point out that few, if any, meetings have been held which have expressed approval of the present state of affairs. We leave the petition in your Excellency's hands, trusting that you will give the people of the colony an opportunity of electing a Legislative Assembly which shall truly and faithfully represent them."

His EXCELLENCY then asked whether any other member of the deputation wished to make any remarks.

Mr. ALFRED ALLEN then rose to address his Excellency. He said the members of the deputation deeply sympathised with his Excellency in the difficult position in which he was placed in connection with the matter under consideration. (Hear, hear.) The agitation had not been induced by any wrong motive, or by any one section of the community. (Applause.) They were very sorry that at such an early stage of his Excellency's presidency over this vast commonwealth they should have to appeal to him as her Majesty's representative to grant their prayer in the interest and welfare of the colony. Many of those present had been associated for many years in political life, but never before in the history of New South Wales had such a unanimous disapproval of the action of Ministers gone forth to the public. They did not wish to be considered as fighting for any political party. (Applause.) They were not party men—(applause)—and he was sure that if his Excellency had been associated with the political movers in the history of this great country he would recognise men amongst them who were incapable of stooping to party politics. (Applause.) As citizens and lovers of their country they deplored the present state of affairs. (Hear, hear.) They believed that the present Ministers were not competent to manage or administer the affairs of the colony, and that the present disorganised state of the House was not calculated to guard the interests of the land they loved so well. (Applause.) They were perfectly satisfied that his Excellency was observant—that his sympathies were really with them—that they were broad and cosmopolitan, and that his Excellency's chief desire was to steer the affairs of the colony to a safe haven—(applause)—a desire conceived in a thoroughly English, noble, and patriotic spirit. (Applause.) If his Excellency found, in the event of their wish not being granted, that they continued the present agitation and called upon the country to emphasise its opinion, he would not blame them in any way. They said this, and yet disclaimed being disturbers of the peace. Unanimity of expression at a time like the present must convince his Excellency that the agitation was not of a party character, but that it had been conceived and maintained for the general good. Whatever his Excellency's decision was in regard to the petitions, they would yield to it, but hoped at the same time that they would not meet with his Excellency's disapproval if, at the same time they continued their efforts to displace the present Ministry.

Mr. MARTIN stated to his Excellency that the returns which had been made out showed that the aggregate of dissentients against the Government amounted to 23,900 persons.

Petitions were presented from Central Sydney, South Sydney, Ryde, Pyrmont, Waverley, Leichhardt, Glebe, Randwick, Paddington, Marrickville, Newtown, Bulli, Bowral, Campbelltown, Singleton, Windsor, Granville, Redfern, St. Marys, Wingham, Ashfield, Prospect, Parramatta, Morpeth, West Maitland, Crookwell, Young, Lithgow, Goulburn, Molong, Liverpool, Walgett, Murrumburrah, Kempsey, St. Leonards, Botany, Waterloo, Petersham, Balmain, Penrith, Kiama, Mittagong, and Bowraville. They were in the following terms:—"To his Excellency the Right Honourable Lord Carrington, P.C., K.C.M.G., Governor of the colony of New South Wales. The following petition of the electors of ———:—1. That the Legislative Assembly, as at present constituted, has ceased to represent the electors, many of the members having openly violated the pledges by which they secured election. 2. That a course of administration has been pursued which has plunged the colony into disastrous financial difficulties and much public injury and confusion, and this course of misrule and ruin has been wickedly supported by a majority of the Legislative Assembly. 3. That your petitioners, as dutiful and loyal subjects of her Most Gracious Majesty, humbly and earnestly pray that your Excellency will be pleased to exercise her Majesty's prerogative of dissolution, and by so doing enable the constituencies to elect a new Legislative Assembly, which may more faithfully represent the true interests of the colony. And, as in duty bound, your petitioners will ever pray."

His Excellency the GOVERNOR in reply to the deputation said: Gentlemen,—Before I give my opinion on this most important subject, I think it is only fair and right and just that I should offer my congratulations to the speakers who have preceded me, on account of the straightforward and moderate manner in which they have set forth their views; and I particularly wish to return my respectful thanks to Mr. Alfred Allen and to you, gentlemen, for the very sympathetic way in which you have acknowledged the difficult position in which I am placed, and also for the flattering opinion which Mr. Allen has been good enough to express of myself personally—an opinion which I need hardly say so long as I remain in this great colony it will be my chief object to deserve. (Applause.) But, gentlemen, as regards the matter in hand, it is possible to conceive circumstances of grave national moment in which the Sovereign or her representative, not being in accord with the Ministers of the day on some great questions of State policy, might be compelled as a last resort to take the extreme course of dissolving Parliament, notwithstanding the refusal of the Ministry, commanding a working majority, to recommend such a course. In the case before us now, petitions are presented to me, which bring sweeping charges against my duly constituted advisers, and invite me to disregard what is at first sight, my constitutional position, on the ground that the Legislative Assembly, as at present constituted, has ceased to represent the electors, many of the members having violated the pledges by which they secured their election. It is a fact that the Government have defeated by large majorities every specific motion in the Legislative Assembly condemning their policy and administration; and this proves, as far as I am entitled to inquire, that they have the confidence at present of a substantial majority of honourable members elected under the free and liberal franchise enjoyed by this colony. (Hear, hear). Twelve months ago a Parliament was elected, three years being the extreme limit of its duration. The late session was exceptionally arduous and protracted. And after mature consideration and anxious thought—after having carefully weighed all that has been set forth in the petitions and elsewhere, I consider it my clear duty to withhold my assent to a proposition, which would involve me in the admission that the ordinary working of your beneficial constitution had been capable of producing a collapse so complete and so hopeless as your petitioners allege to have occurred. The fact that I have given an immediate answer to the deputation, will not, I feel certain, be misinterpreted or misunderstood by the country. (Hear, hear.) I fully recognise the gravity of the situation, and I know that nothing but a strong sense of duty could have induced the gentlemen forming this deputation to have counselled the Governor to take such a step as this. (Applause.) In no way do I wish to shirk the duties entrusted to me by the Queen—(applause)—or to avoid its responsibilities—(applause)—and I can only trust that the decision at which I have arrived, after much careful consideration, may hereafter prove to have been made in the true interests of our great and important colony.

The deputation then withdrew, and on leaving Government House gave three cheers for his Excellency.

MR. JOSEPH CREER, M.L.A., BEFORE HIS CONSTITUENTS.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]

(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

NEWCASTLE, SUNDAY.

On Saturday evening Mr. Joseph Creer, senior member for Northumberland, addressed the electors of Wallsend and Plattsburg from the balcony of Reen's Hotel, in the latter municipality. There was a very large and respectable audience of some 400 or 500 persons, which, doubtless, would have been still greater but that it was pay-night, and many shopkeepers had to remain at their business. Mr. Elijah Abel (Mayor of Wallsend) presided. On the platform were Mr. Scholey (Mayor of Waratah), Alderman Upfold (Waratah), Alderman Richardson (Plattsburg), Alderman Laing, Mr. T. Abel, and others.

The CHAIRMAN, in a short speech, briefly introduced Mr. Creer, who, he said, had come up expressly to give an account of his stewardship, and for whom he would ask a patient hearing.

Mr. J. CREER, who experienced a very hearty reception, expressed the pleasure he felt in meeting the electors for the purpose of giving them an outline of what he had been doing during the late session of Parliament. Since his election the House had been almost continually sitting, yet there had been a great many delays in the transaction of business. Although the hours occupied were very long, he had often thought, indeed he very much desired, that there could be introduced into Parliament the eight-hours system. (Cheers.) He believed that more work and better work would be done for the interests of the country if members were compelled to legislate for only eight hours daily instead of the lengthy hours which have been so characteristic of the recent session. (Hear, hear.) A man required more than ordinary physical strength to endure these day and night sittings. Many people thought the position of a member of Parliament was a very rosy one. He thought so—(laughter)—he knew always that it was a very honourable one, but he soon found that its duties were very arduous if members did their duties faithfully. He felt that he represented the most important industrial constituency in the whole colony, and that he had a great amount of responsibility on his shoulders. Looking at its great importance in the first place, then to them as electors, and then to the colony as a whole, he felt that he had done his best to represent them faithfully in the Parliament of the country. (Applause.) On Parliament assembling early in November last year the House met the Dibbs Government. In a short time after that the Government found they had not a working majority, and they resigned in a fortnight. Sir John Robertson was sent for to form a Ministry, and, old as he was, with true loyalty and patriotism he took upon himself to do so. He (Mr. Creer) regretted to say that Sir John was sadly disappointed in those who promised to assist him in forming a Government. (A voice: "He was sold.") Many of those who helped to oust the Dibbs Government would neither come to his assistance nor take office when it was offered to them. Nothing daunted, however, Sir John did form a Government, and that Government met the House. In that Government there were many young members new to office, but he (Mr. Creer) did not look so much at the men themselves as at the measures they introduced. (Applause.) Therefore he supported them, believing they were anxious for the welfare and true interests of the colony. That Government, however, did not meet with much support, but with a contrary vote, and they had to retire. Then Sir Patrick Jennings, the present Premier, was sent for, and every effort was made by Sir Patrick and Sir John to form a coalition Government. At one time it was considered that a very strong coalition Government could be formed, and he (Mr. Creer) up to the present day regretted that the coalition Government then announced did not become an accomplished fact. In that coalition were Sir John Robertson, Messrs. Garrard, Wisdom, G. B. Simpson, G. R. Dibbs, Sir Patrick Jennings, J. F. Burns, Lyne, and Want. All of these were good men, and meant thoroughly to do their utmost for the advancement and prosperity of the colony; although it was a very serious time for any Government to take office with a deficit of over £1,000,000 to contend with. (Hear, hear.) At the very last moment, however, just as they were about to be sworn in, something occurred to break up the coalition, and Sir Patrick Jennings was then called upon by his Excellency to form a Government, and the present Ministry was formed, which had been in power ever since. Shortly after this the health of Sir John Robertson failed, and he retired from public life. His resignation was received with regret, not only in the House, but throughout the whole country. There was not a more upright, pure, loyal, generous, or warmer-hearted patriot in the whole colony than Sir John Robertson. (Loud applause.) On his retirement it was proposed to give him a grant of £10,000. Now while he (Mr. Creer) believed that if any man in this country deserved the thanks and recognition of the electors of this colony, Sir John Robertson did, yet he (Mr. Creer) could not support that vote. He would gladly contribute towards a fund of that kind, and so would thousands of others, yet he could not conscientiously sanction such a grant coming from the Consolidated Revenue, as he thought such a precedent might ultimately be generally abused. (Hear, hear.) He was opposed to grants and pensions of any kind; and while he sympathised with and fully recognised the exertions of Sir John during a life time, yet he could not, for these reasons, support the grant from that source. (Hear, hear.) The Jennings Government met the House, and the first matter they had to deal with was to put the finances of the colony on a proper footing. They met the House with a declared deficit of £1,309,000, and with the depressed condition of the country staring them in the face. They brought forward several proposals to meet this, viz., increased stamp duties, ad valorem duties, and land and income tax. He felt it to be his duty to support these measures. (Loud applause.) Up to the present time he had never been a supporter of any particular set of men, but so long as he remained in Parliament he would always support what he believed to be good measures, whoever brought them forward. (Cheers.) The stamp duties were passed almost unanimously in the Assembly, but they were altered in such a manner in the Upper House that a new measure was framed, which was unanimously passed in the Lower House, and ultimately in the Upper, as it now exists. The next measure was the ad valorem duties. He did not think that any measure had ever been more warmly discussed, and it was said that the fiscal policy of the country was about to be altered, and that the 5 per cent. ad valorem duty was only "sneaking in" protection. Now, he did not and never could, see how this 5 per cent. duty on certain imported goods could bring about a protective tariff into the colony. (Hear, hear.) He believed in ad valorem duties for these reasons. The revenue about to be collected from this source would amount to £400,000, and increased specific duties would give £68,000 more. These united would go a long way to meet the large deficit, and although the ad valorem duties increased the price of all commodities used, not only by the wealthiest, but also by the poorest members of the community, yet all were equally bound to help to meet the deficit. While it taxed the poor man's clothing, it also taxed the silks and satins of the wealthier classes—(hear, hear)—and would be the means of bringing in over £1000 per day as revenue to keep the public works going. The bill was passed, and would remain the law for three years. The next measure brought forward by the Jennings Government was the land and income tax, and above all taxes he was in favour of these. (Loud applause.) [A voice: "What about absentees?"] Most certainly, he was in favour of taxing absentees. The great bulk of taxation had hitherto been wrung from the working classes, while the wealthy had been to a great extent free from their share of taxation up to the present time, and it was because a land tax would compel the owners of enormous estates, increasing in value every day, by industrial improvements all round them, to contribute their share towards the revenue, that he most strenuously supported this measure. This was carried by a large majority in the Assembly, but he regretted to say that it was thrown out in the Upper House. [A voice: "We will throw them out yet."] He wished they would. (Applause.) He felt, however, that the Upper House would yet have to pass it before long. (Renewed applause.) The next measure was the income tax. He believed this to be the most just and equitable between man and man. If a man could earn £500 per annum he ought to pay his proportionate share of the revenue, and if another earned £5000 he should do the same. (Cheers.) The income tax, however, did not pass the Lower House, and nothing had astonished him more since he had been in Parliament than to see that those members who posed in the Assembly as champions of the working classes refused to vote for an income tax. [A voice: "Put them out of the House," and applause.] After referring to Mr. Gladstone and Lord Beaconsfield in connection with the income tax, maintaining that while they might occasionally regret its necessity, yet that they always fell back upon it as a legitimate means of raising revenue, he said that civil servants in receipt of large salaries should be taxed. He knew gentlemen owning millions of acres of land which they had leased to other people, and who drew enormous incomes from the rent of such land. Surely such men as these, who lived in luxury without any trouble, or entering into any enterprise to benefit the country, or assisting industry of any kind throughout the colony—surely a law ought to be made to compel them to contribute towards the expenses of the State. (Applause.) He was therefore strongly in favour of a land and income tax, and he fully believed that before long these measures would become the law of the land. With regard to a dissolution, he believed the country would be no better off if they had one, though a good many in the House might desire it. When it did come, however, it would be to receive the voice of the country whether the rich man should not contribute his quota towards the expense of governing the country, as well as the poor man. (Applause.) He was satisfied that when this test question was brought before the people of New South Wales the great bulk of the electors would say that it was time the taxation of the country should fall equitably upon every man in the colony, according to his circumstances. England, America, Austria, France, and other large countries had an income-tax, and he thought it high time New South Wales had one also. (Hear, hear.) Referring to the deficit, he said he felt for any Government which had to contend with a deficit. The deficit which the present Ministry had met when taking office had increased from £1,309,000 to £2,100,000 since they had been in power. This was an enormous burden and a terrible responsibility for any Government to meet and deal with successfully. He regretted to say, however, that there had been a large amount of unfairness and injustice in very many of the public utterances which had been made as to who was responsible for this large deficit. The present Government had been blamed for the first deficit of £1,309,000, but they had no more to do with it than those before him. It took place during the Stuart administration. It was only too true, however, that whatever Government might be in power it always had to suffer for the sins of its predecessors. This was unfair. How was the deficit increased then? He denied that the present Government was the cause of it by their extravagance. If any one would take the trouble to look fairly into the matter they would see there was but little blame attaching to the Government. He had told them at the commencement he did not care who was in power, he only looked at the measures they brought in. He always sat on the cross benches, and voted independently, trying to take an honest and just view of the case. He therefore thought the Government were not to blame for the great deficit at the present time. (Applause.) They had just passed through an unparalleled series of droughts in the history of the colony, and there had been a general depression, not only in this country, but in all the Australian colonies, and indeed throughout all the civilised world. When a community suffers from such causes, so must Governments. He was, however, thankful to say he believed they were nearing the end of the depression, and that there was a grand future for this bright and glorious country—brighter than they had ever seen in the past. (Hear, hear.) The present Government expected to receive £500,000 from the land and income tax. These bills, however, were not passed, and thus there was a dead loss of revenue to that amount which the Government had built upon. Well, the Government could not be blamed for that, could they? (Cries of "No, no.") They had also lost the expected revenue from beer, spirits, and wine to the amount of £17,000 from various causes. In addition to this, and because of the depressed state of the times, the railway receipts had greatly diminished. In going through some of the items in connection with the railways he had calculated that the Government had up to the commencement of last October suffered a decrease in the receipts of £79,000, but he had since been informed by a Minister of the Crown that it could not be less than £200,000. They surely could not blame the Government for the loss of traffic on the railways. There had also been loss of revenue from land during the past nine months at the very least of £500,000. Thus, by adding these items together, they would see that the Government had carried their points, and had the depression not occurred, the deficit would have been nearly met, viz., £500,000 land tax, £2,000,000 railway receipts, £17,000 from wines and beer, and the balance from the income tax. It only required any honest man to investigate the whole case, and he would defy them to say that the present Government was to blame for the present deficit. The reason why the Government was behindhand regarding the sales of land was easily explained. In 1884 the Stuart Government passed an amended Land Bill, saying that only 200,000 acres should be sold in one year. If the Government could even have sold that quantity, it would have brought them £200,000, if only at £1 per acre, but they had not sold more than 25,000 acres of the 200,000. The Government had found it necessary in order to get the boundaries of runs fixed under the new Land Bill, that surveys should take place. Well, those surveys had not yet been prepared, and this delay had deprived the Government of the rentals for land which they should have received, but which probably would not come to hand till next year. Could not any honest man, whose mind was not abused, see that circumstances which had arisen had prevented the Government from raising revenue, and thus disabled them from meeting the expenditure which had been incurred? They had been deprived of at least a million and a-half of revenue through the country not being prosperous. (Hear, hear.) They had been told over and over again by members in the House who had embarrassed the Government in every possible way, that the latter had been the means of bringing the country into the present depressed state. Well, in the years 1880-81-82 they had the Parkes Government in power for three years. They sold in that time no less than £6,320,000 worth of the people's estate. Those before him could easily see, with a land revenue like that, that whenever the Government wanted money they only had to sell the land to whatever amount they desired, but the sales of land had been comparatively stopped since then. (A voice: "Why did they not sell more than 200,000 out of the 2,000,000 acres?") He would explain. At one time a man could select land and pay the annual interest on the capital at the rate of 1s. per acre; but by the law of 1884 he could have fixity of tenure for 20 years with a rental of only 1d. or one halfpenny, or even 2d. per acre. This was one reason, and another was that money was scarce at the banks, and the latter did not like to advance. With regard to protection, it had been said that the 5 per cent. ad valorem duties were "sneaking-in" protection. Well, if a 5 per cent duty was the means of establishing industries in this colony, and providing employment for starving mechanics and working-men, in God's name let them have it. (Loud applause.) He candidly admitted that he had been thinking more of protection now than ever he had done before he saw and heard of some thousands of best mechanics which the country could produce wandering the streets, and going to the Government for a bowl of soup. ("Shame, shame.") Yet, while this was the case, he saw merchants, free-traders, driving down to their offices in carriages and pairs. They had got all their money by importing goods. Now, if this means that our mechanics and labourers are to want work, and we ourselves are to consume that which gives labour to the other countries and not to our own, he thought the time was fast approaching when they should look to their own people first. (Loud applause.) Referring again to the distress in and around Sydney, and the necessity for an alteration of such a state of affairs, he said no nation under the sun could be looked upon as great that did not manufacture. They had been told in the leading press of the colony that we could do very well by hewing coal, cutting timber, and sending away our raw products for other countries to manufacture. This might be all very well for some; but in the meantime working men were wanting employment, and if the Government, instead of sending money to other countries for articles, could get them made in this colony, they ought to do so. (Loud applause.) He had spoken to Mr. Lyne on this subject, and to the same effect. They must, however, do nothing rashly. It was a subject that required a deal of thinking over. He then referred to his unavoidable absence on the occasion when the vote of £112,000 was lost for the Newcastle harbour, explaining that he had been compelled to be at the Maitland court as a land valuer for the Government; but he had paired with Mr. Hawthorne, member for Balmain, so that his vote was recorded in its favour. With regard to the Civil Service Bill, he was in favour of paying civil servants well, but decidedly against pensions of any kind. He would compel every one to assure his life and would insist that promotion should only go by merit. He thought, however, that more work could be done at one-third of the cost at the present time. In conclusion, he thanked them for the very patient hearing they had given him. Nothing had given him greater pleasure than being of service to his electorate. He had been blamed for getting one or two of his constituents some Government billets. Well, what of that? He could say, in the words of the song, "They all do it, they all do it." (Roars of laughter, which lasted some time). Why should he not do the same for them? Yet he would say to the young men before him, "Do not enter the Civil service." If they would get on in the world let them build up their own fortunes with energy and determination. The highest position in the land was open to them if they were honest, persevering, and sober. No man, however clever, could get on without sobriety. If the young men before him acted thus, they would attain positions for themselves which their fathers little thought of. (Loud and prolonged applause).

In reply to questions, Mr. Creer said that the £190,000 placed on the estimates for immigration was to pay for passages already promised; that he was opposed to assisted immigration and always would be; that the railway lines now before the House were brought in by the previous Government and had nothing to do with the present one; and that he was in favour of payment of members.

Alderman Richardson moved, "That the explanation given by Mr. Creer of his conduct in Parliament was highly satisfactory. What he had promised on the hustings he had fully carried out. He had done good for the colony at large, and also to his own electorate, as the record of both borough councils could show. (Applause.)

Mr. Laing seconded the motion, which on being put by the chairman was carried unanimously, and with acclamation.

Mr. Creer, in returning thanks, said he would always be glad to meet them. Both the Minister for Works and Minister for Lands had promised to come and visit the electorate and see for themselves how great its importance really was.

A vote of thanks to the chairman and press, and three cheers for the Queen brought the proceedings, which were of a most orderly character throughout, to a close, Mr. Creer having spoken for nearly an hour and a half.

MEETING OF PARISHIONERS OF ST PETER'S CHURCH, SURRY HILLS.

A meeting of the parishioners of St. Peter's Church, Devonshire-street, Surry Hills, was held in the building on Sunday afternoon to devise steps for raising funds for the construction of a new church. The present building, which contrives a double debt to pay, is used both as church and school and has latterly been found quite inadequate for the requirements of the rapidly increasing congregation. Over 12 months ago steps were taken to have the church erected, but in the absence of the Cardinal the movement fell through. The present, however, appears more likely to be successful. The new building will cost £6000, and will seat a congregation of 1000.

Cardinal Moran presided at the meeting, there being present on the platform the Very Rev. Dr. O'Haran, Very Rev. Dr. Murphy, Rev. P. Coonan, administrator of the Cathedral, Rev. J. Byrne, Rev. M. E. O'Brien, pastor, Messrs. D. O'Connor and T. M. Williamson, M.s.L.A., and Messrs. Costello, Dinisy, Stanley, J. P. Finnigan, Deeley, Moloney, Horan, Huntsman, Mullens, Martin, J. Hunt, O'Brien, Matthews, Gilchrist, Keogh, Brogan, Ryan, Aldermen O'Connell, Kelly, Williams, Hayes, Byrne, and Doolan. There were over 300 persons present including the members of the Hibernian Australian Catholic Benefit Society and the Holy Catholic Guild.

The Cardinal, in opening the meeting, said: I have come amongst you this afternoon, at the invitation of your zealous pastor, on a particularly practical subject. The purpose is to see what the resources of the district may be towards carrying out the great work which this district has had at heart for a considerable time. The parishioners of this district have realised the necessity of having a larger place for divine work. Indeed, this church in which we are assembled should be rather considered as a school than a church. It was intended as a school-church, to combine at the same time the instruction of the children in the paths of piety and science, and to supply a convenient place for offering up the holy sacrifice of the mass until a befitting church should be erected. The parishioners seem to be of opinion that the time has now come when the erection of their own church should be no longer delayed. A few weeks ago in another district—Petersham—a similar practical meeting was held. The zealous pastor of that district invited the parishioners together to see what were the resources of that district, and what sums they would undertake to present to him towards the erection of a new church. I am happy to say that that district, which is smaller than Surry Hills, and in which, I dare say, the faithful cannot boast of greater energy or greater earnestness in the cause of piety and religion than the faithful of this district, the sum already realised is more than £2500, and that is only the commencement of the action in that district. The practical purpose of the meeting this afternoon is that your pastor may see what sums he may rely upon for the erection of a church dedicated to the apostle of the Church—St. Peter. I trust that your action will be such as will justify him and you in carrying out this work. It is little more than 12 months since they held a meeting here. I was leaving the colony at the time, and many thought I would not come back; but I was quite determined to do so. Whatever were the arrangements of the committee I could realise that there was not much earnestness or solidity about them. I said I would give £1000 if I saw they were in earnest in the work, and that a total abstinence society was started in the district by the time I returned. On my return, however, I found that the total abstinence society had not been instituted, and that the committee had vanished into thin air, and I devoted the £1000 to other religious works. That money will not, therefore, be available; but I will give all at my command to aid you in this work.

Mr. Williamson, M.L.A., moved,—"That this meeting is of opinion that there is a great necessity for the erection of a new church in the parish of St. Peters."

Mr. Henry Daly seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously.

Mr. O'Connor, M.L.A., moved,—"That a fund be now opened to carry into effect the foregoing resolution."

Mr. W. Kelly seconded the motion, which was carried unanimously

Father O'Brien read the following financial statement:—"There was a debt due on the ground here at the beginning of the year, when his Eminence sent me here, to the extent of £3318. On the 1st March we organised a system of weekly collections from house to house, which has been eminently successful, so far that a month ago we had raised some £400, which I paid in to his Eminence on the debt, for which he very kindly gave me a receipt for £500, thus reducing the debt on ground to £2818 12s. 6d. The school church is free of debt. There is in the bank to our credit £210 16s. 6d., of which £206 10s. 11d. is to the credit of the new church. We now find ourselves crowded out of the present building, both when used as church or school, and we appeal as we are doing to-day for a new church."

The Cardinal announced that the amount received and promised that day amounted to £920. He wished the parishioners every success, and trusted that at no distant date another meeting would be held, when those who had promised donations at the laying of the foundation-stone would be able to realise their promises.

Mr. C. Martin moved, and Mr. P. Burke seconded, a vote of thanks to the Cardinal, which was carried with applause.

The Cardinal, in reply, thanked the parishioners warmly for the vote of thanks. He noticed with pleasure that the names of some of those who did not belong to the Roman Catholic communion appeared on the collection list, and he trusted that the Catholics of the district would reciprocate that spirit of concord and unanimity of which such a good example had been set.

A benediction, pronounced by the Cardinal, then terminated the meeting.

REPORTING BY BLIND PERSONS.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE HERALD.

Sir,—With reference to the correspondence which has recently appeared in your columns on the above subject, allow me, as a shorthand-writer of several years' experience, to state that I fail to see the reason why "True Sympathiser's" novel idea could not be carried into effect. Your correspondent, however, states that Pitman's system of phonography could not be utilised by the blind reporter on the ground that it has "three positions," and yet he states in his first letter that a phonographer (Mr. F. Pitman) has frequently reported meetings very successfully in the dark; this appears to be a contradiction. I am of opinion that paper could be specially prepared, at very little expense, with sunken lines, and this would, I think, admirably answer the purpose. Another correspondent, "Reporter," says that there would be a great difficulty for blind reporters to detect the various speakers by their voices. Allow me to point out that there are numerous lectures, sermons, &c., delivered almost daily, where the blind reporter could find plenty of scope for his labour, without reporting public meetings or parliamentary proceedings. I am, &c.,

THE CRICKET MATCH.

ALL-ENGLAND ELEVEN v. NEW SOUTH WALES.

SECOND DAY.

On Saturday the match between the English team of professional cricketers under Alfred Shaw, Shrewsbury, and Lillywhite and an eleven representing New South Wales was continued on the Association Cricket Ground. The day was bright, fine, and cool, and with such weather it was anticipated that there would be a good wicket, and, following that, an excellent display of batting on the part of the Englishmen from whom great things in that line were expected. It was true that on the preceding day they had been disposed of for the small total of 74, runs, and that the colonials had 37 runs to the good in the first innings, but the general opinion was that on a fine day with a good wicket such a small advantage was not worthy of consideration when a team like that of the visitors had to be reckoned with. The wicket had been carefully rolled, but not watered, having already had more than sufficient moisture. Rain fell during Friday night. The wicket certainly proved much better than on Friday, and at the commencement of the Englishmen's second innings played fairly well; but after a while the ball began to "kick" somewhat at the southern end. At the time play was resumed there were probably not more than 800 spectators within the enclosure, but they began rapidly to flow in, and the lawns round the ring, together with the grand stand and the new pavilion became gradually dense with human beings. It was surprising how the people thronged to the place. They streamed along the narrow track which crosses the rifle range; Moore Park was dotted in every direction with small groups, or by twos and threes, and solitary individuals, all bound to the common point of rendezvous, the gates of the cricket ground; whilst trams running at very frequent intervals, and overcrowded beyond all possibility of comfort, poured their living streams into the enclosure. When the game was continued after the adjournment for luncheon there were probably 10,000 spectators present, and before the afternoon closed there could not have been fewer than 12,000. The grand stand was filled, and numbers were on the grand stand lawn, the old pavilion which had been thrown open for ladies was crowded, and the new pavilion was also thronged, whilst every other portion of the ground was black with spectators. That the vast crowd was deeply interested in the game was manifested by the quiet and decorum which reigned, broken only by some outburst of applause when a good hit was made, or in recognition of some piece of splendid fielding, or when some batsman's colours were lowered. His Excellency the Governor and Lady Carrington visited the ground during the afternoon, and remained until the conclusion of the match. They were welcomed by the officials of the association, and escorted to the vice-regal box in the grand stand, cheers from the spectators alone marking their arrival, there being no band to give forth the strains of the National Anthem. The close play of the preceding day had whetted the appetites of the crowd for the match, and they had come in anticipation of seeing a grand display of cricket. Some had come expecting to see the colonial representatives ignominiously "wiped out." In this they were disappointed, but they were regaled with a fine display of cricket in all its departments, and with a decidedly popular termination to the game.

The New South Wales team was welcomed with applause when it took its place in the field at five minutes past 12 o'clock, and Barlow (with four runs to his credit) and Shrewsbury, the not-out Englishmen, took their places at the wickets. Turner and Ferris were the bowlers, and were in excellent form, Ferris particularly, with his left-handed bowling, getting a dangerous work on the ball from leg, whilst Turner took the palm for destructiveness, as on the previous day. Both bowled splendidly, and at one time completely stuck up the batsmen. The large number of maidens bowled shows how they forced the batsmen to defensive tactics. The persistent attack of these bowlers on the wickets was ably seconded by clever fielding, and by the smart wicket-keeping of Burton, who had recovered form, and was doing well. As maiden after maiden was bowled and at every good piece of fielding or clever defence the keen interest of the spectators found appreciative and demonstrative expression. At last the visitors were sent back to the pavilion with only 98 runs from the innings, leaving New South Wales 62 runs to get to win. The Englishmen took the field at 4 o'clock, and were welcomed with cheers, Bannerman and M'Donnell stepping to the defence of the wickets, the former taking strike from Lohmann, who bowled from the southern end. Play had no sooner commenced than it was seen that the Englishmen were upon their mettle, and had set themselves with a dogged determination to keep down the runs. The bowlers trundled in their best form. Sherwin behind the wickets was nimble as a cat, and the fielders watched each stroke of the batsmen with the greatest eagerness. Bannerman soon lost his partner and was joined by Moses. These two batsmen then gave an exhibition of careful, stubborn defence that was inspiriting to the spectators. The flower of English professional bowling essayed in vain for nearly two hours to lower their stumps. With such bowling, fielding, and batting, runs came but slowly, and when, after about an hour and a half at the wicket, Bannerman retired for a faultless 26, with only 11 wanting to win the match, he received quite an ovation. The Englishmen had taken heart when M'Donnell retired; and it must be said to their credit that they played what was evidently a losing game with great pluck throughout. At 6 o'clock, when the stumps ought to have been drawn for the day, the colonials only required seven runs to win, and it was decided to play out the match, instead of leaving the seven to be obtained on Monday. Moses objected to continuing, as the light was becoming very dull, storm clouds covering the western sky, but there were loud calls of "Play it out" from all parts of the ground. The game was continued, and resulted in a victory for New South Wales with six wickets to spare. The English team was captained by Shrewsbury, P. M'Donnell acting in a similar capacity for New South Wales. J. Lillywhite was umpire and Mr. J. G. Jackson scorer for the Englishmen. Mr. T. Nunn was umpire for New South Wales, and Mr. H. Solomon, scorer. The following are the particulars of the game:—

THE PLAY.

At five minutes past 12 Barlow and Shrewsbury, the not-out men of the previous day, appeared at the wickets to continue the second innings of the English Eleven, their appearance and that of the New South Wales team in the field being the signal for applause. Turner opened the bowling from the northern end to Barlow, Ferris taking the ball at the southern end, and Burton wicket-keeping. Two maidens were bowled, and Barlow (who had scored four on Friday) commenced operations by putting the ball in the slips for two. A leg bye was scored in the next over. After some cautious play Shrewsbury broke his "duck egg" by putting the ball in the slips for a single, and a maiden over followed. Barlow got 1 for a hit to square leg in the next over. A couple of maidens were bowled, and then Barlow cut a ball from Ferris along the carpet to the fence for 4, driving the last ball of the same over past the bowler for 2. Shrewsbury quietly put one to leg from Turner for a single. Several singles at uneven intervals followed, and then Barlow sent the ball to the on for two. A few balls afterwards Barlow was caught by M'Donnell in the slips from a bumpy ball, which went off the batsman's hand, after a carefully compiled innings. 1-16-22. Barnes joined Shrewsbury, and soon commenced scoring by cutting the ball for 1; and two overs afterwards he slipped it from Ferris for 4. Some patient defensive play succeeded, broken at last by Barnes tipping a ball from Ferris for 2. He lost his partner in the next over, Shrewsbury being caught in the slips by M'Donnell, off Turner's bowling. 2-4-29. Read filled the vacancy, but in the first ball of the next over Barnes was given out leg before off Ferris's bowling. 3-7-29. Scotton joined Read, and commenced by a drive for 3. Read skied one to square leg, and Whiting made a tremendous effort to reach it, but just failed, and Read scored 2. Read snicked one for 3, and soon afterwards drove the ball off Ferris for 2. He ran a risky 2 from Ferris for a fine drive along the grass to the off, the ball being smartly returned by Moses, Read's hitting greatly enlivening the game at this stage. The same player scored 2 by skying a ball from Ferris to the off just out of Bannerman's reach, and followed it almost directly after by an on drive for 2. Some singles followed, and then Read opened his shoulders to Ferris, putting one to square leg for 4. Marr then took the bowling from Turner at the northern end, his first over being a maiden. Ogilvie relieved Ferris at the other end, Read driving the second ball for 1. Scotton hit the next ball to leg for 4, turning right round to it, and 60 was telegraphed. Read drove the ball from Marr for 2. Ogilvie bowled a maiden, and Marr followed his example. In the next over Scotton put one to the slips for 3. The change in the bowling was manifestly appreciated by the batsmen, who in the 10 minutes just before luncheon made 11 runs. At luncheon time the game stood at three wickets for 65 runs, Read 23, and Scotton 13, being not out. After lunch Turner and Ferris resumed the bowling, and several maidens followed. Scotton got a single off Ferris for a tip to square leg, and snicked one in the next over for 4, and 70 went up. The batsmen appeared to be well set, Scotton scoring 2 and 1 in quick succession. The partnership, however, soon came to an end, Scotton being smartly caught by Gregory at point off Turner's bowling for 21 runs. 4-21-74. Gunn filled the vacancy, but soon lost his mate, Ferris with a curling ball finding a weak spot in Read's defence. 5-24-74. Bates was the next man to toe the crease, and a maiden over from Ferris was bowled. In the next over, Gunn tipped a ball from Turner to leg for 2, and soon after obtained 2 for a similar stroke, and made a cut for 3. In the second succeeding over, Bates was in doubt how to play a well-pitched ball from Turner, and retired. 6-0-81. Flowers partnered Gunn, and cut a ball for 3, and soon afterwards got a single. The batsmen were stuck up by the bowlers for a while, until Gunn broke the monotony with a single, and a couple of overs following Flowers got another single. Then came a long lull in the scoring, the attack being stubborn, and maiden over succeeding maiden over in almost wearying succession. Then Flowers succeeded in tipping the ball first for a single and then for 2, but in the succeeding over Gunn in attempting to play forward to Turner was clean bowled. 7—5—90. Briggs joined Flowers, but was bowled by Turner with the first ball, the feat "bringing down the house." 8—0—90. Lohmann succeeded to the vacancy, and in the same over 2 were obtained for a bye. Lohmann skied one for a single to on, no one being in the vicinity, and Flowers snicked the ball for 2 from Turner. The partnership between the men was only brief, Lohmann being cleverly stumped by Burton off the bowling of Ferris. 9-1-95. The appearance of Sherwin to fill the last vacancy was greeted with applause by the spectators. He scored 1 for a fluky cut off Ferris, and then Flowers added 2 to his score. In the first ball of the next over Turner dismissed Sherwin, 10-1-98. The following are the scores:—

After the usual interval at 4 o'clock, the Englishmen took the field, Bannerman and M'Donnell going to the defence of the wickets, the former taking strike from Lohmann, who bowled from the northern end, Barnes opening the trundling from the south. Bannerman put the second ball of the over to leg for 1, and M'Donnell's taking strike was the signal for the Englishmen spreading themselves over the field. M'Donnell appeared to be nervously anxious to get runs, and this anxiety nearly cost him his wicket at the outset. Barnes bowled a maiden to Bannerman, and then M'Donnell took strike from Lohmann. It was facetiously remarked that three of the Englishmen were sitting on the rails, three fieldsmen being close to the fence in front of the new pavilion. The wisdom of placing them so far out was presently shown, for M'Donnell opened his shoulders to the second ball from Lohmann, and in attempting a big hit only succeeded in lifting it to the on, where it was safely held by Gunn in a well-judged low catch. The fieldsman was warmly applauded. 1-0-1. The dismissal of this hard-hitter appeared to give the Englishmen great satisfaction, and when Moses filled the gap they set themselves in downright earnest to keep down the runs. Singles came very slowly, six runs only resulting from half-an-hour's play, the batsmen playing with great caution. Then Moses sent a ball from Lohmann to leg for 3, the third run being a very risky one. Bannerman shortly afterwards drove a ball from the same bowler to the on for 2, and 11 appeared on the telegraph board. Bannerman sent the same bowler to leg for 3, and Moses turned round to another from Lohmann and sent it nearly to the southern fence for 2. Bates took the trundling from Lohmann at the northern end and bowled a maiden. Bannerman sent Bates to leg for 2. Moses drove Bates for 1. Then Briggs took the ball from Barnes to try and dissolve the partnership and bowled a maiden. Bannerman drove the ball from Bates to the off for 2, and 21 appeared on the board. Moses put Briggs to square-leg for 1. Some overs after Bannerman drove Briggs to the off for 4, the stroke being loudly applauded. Moses put one from Bates in the slips for 1. Bannerman several overs after drove Bates for 1, and Moses sent one from the same bowler to the on for 1. The batsmen were well set and playing most carefully. After several maiden overs, Barlow took the ball from Briggs, the previous changes not having come off. After a good deal of stonewalling, Bannerman drove Bates for 2, bringing 31 on the board, just half the number required to win. In the succeeding over Moses snicked a ball from Barlow for 3, and Bannerman got 1 in the same over off the same bowler. Bannerman drove the ball in the following over from Bates for 1, each scoring stroke of the colonials eliciting loud applause. Moses made a drive for a single off the same bowler, and scored 1 for a snick in the next over from Barlow, the play becoming very exciting as the numbers on the board rose. Flowers relieved Bates at the northern end and bowled a maiden. Lohmann took the ball from Barlow at the opposite wicket, and Bannerman drove the second ball of the over for 3, bringing 41 up. After several more overs Moses sent Lohmann to square-leg for 1, and repeated the operation in the next over from Flowers. Moses drove Lohmann for 1, and snicked the ball in the next over from Flowers for 2, following it by a high drive for 1. Some time after he got a single off Lohmann. Bannerman drove the same bowler to the on for 3, and 51 was signalled. The first ball of the next over was tipped by Bannerman into Sherwin's hands behind the wickets. 2-26-51. Mather joined Moses, and drove Flowers for 1, causing 52 to appear on the board. Moses added 1 to his score, and some time after drove Lohmann for 2. In the next over Mather skied one from Flowers, and retired with 1 to his credit. 3-1-55. Marr filled the vacancy. The light getting dull, and as it was past 6 o'clock, Moses objected to playing it out. Loud cries of "Play it out" being raised by the spectators, the game was continued, and Moses snicked a ball from Flowers for 2 runs; but in the next over lost his partner, Marr being bowled by Lohmann. 4-0-57. The light was all in the bowler's favour. Turner took the vacant place, and obtained 2 for his first strike off Lohmann, and 1 off the next ball, bringing up 61 on the board amid cheers. Marr made the winning hit off Lohmann, leaving the New South Wales team victorious with six wickets to spare, Moses, who went in second wicket, and Marr carrying out their bats. PRINCE ALFRED YACHT CLUB.

The second of the series of yacht races under the auspices of the above club came off on Saturday. The conditions of weather could not have possibly been better. A very nice "big topsail" breeze from a point or so to the eastward of N.E., steady from start to finish, putting the boats just merely down to the covering-board, all the time they were on the wind.

The race was to a certain extent an experimental one, being for cruisers only; that is to say the high flyers stood out for once, and gave the slow boats a race all to themselves. They were to sail in cruising trim—no spinnakers nor squaresails being allowed, but they were allowed to carry square-headed topsails. The race was for £10, the course being from a line between starter's boat and Nelson buoy, down round R. S. Y. S. buoy at Manly, back round Shark Island and Fort Denison, thence down round lightship, Sow and Pigs, and Shark Island, and finish at flagboat off Fort Macquarie. The entries were—Tritonia, F. Ward, 4 tons, scratch; Carina, Captain Gascoigne, A.D.C., 9 tons, 2 minutes; Lotos, A. Brambach, 9 tons, 2 minutes; Harpy, C. A. Benbow, 10 tons, 3 minutes; Peri, W. Laidley, 15 tons, 4 minutes; Warringa, A. W. Charlton, 7 tons, 6 minutes; Ione, P. O. Williams, 6 tons, 7 minutes; Ruby, A. H. Griffiths, 6 tons, 10 minutes. The commodore (Dr. Milford) officiated as starter, and when his flag fell at 2 o'clock, all crossed the line with the exception of Ione. The club steamer was late in leaving the wharf, so that the actual start was not seen by those on board, but from the positions almost immediately after they would appear to have crossed in the following order:—Carina, Tritonia, Harpy, Lotos, Ruby, Peri, Warringa. They started just on the top of the tide, and therefore very little in the way of piloting was necessary; all that was required being to work down the middle of the harbour. Little need be said of the work as far as Manly, excepting that the Carina not only held her lead, but widened the gap between herself and the others a little bit on every tack. The Harpy passed the Tritonia on the off shore leg out of Taylor Bay. With so much east in the wind it was a close reach from abreast of Chowder to the buoy at Manly, which the boats rounded as follows:—Carina, 3h. 9min. 33sec.; Harpie, 3h. 12min. 5secs.; Tritonia, 3h. 14min. 57sec.; Lotos, 3h. 15min 23sec.; Ruby, 3h. 19min. 24sec.; Peri, 3h. 19min. 27sec. The Warringa was not timed. From this mark to Shark Island they had the wind broad on the port quarter, so that the head sails drew, and made the time pretty fast. The only alteration in position was that the Peri passed the Ruby. Timing at Shark Island was—Carina, 3h. 44min. 50sec.; Harpie, 3h. 47min. 15sec.; Tritonia, 3h. 50min. 33sec.; Lotos, 3h. 52min. 8sec.; Peri, 3h. 58min. 3sec.; Ruby, 4h. By this it will be seen that the Carina had gained 53 seconds on the Harpy, and 17 seconds on the Tritonia. A jib was of course necessary for the run to Fort Denison, and as the wind seemed a bit more northerly up the harbour, head sails again did some good service. The Fort was rounded as follows:—Carina, 4h. 3min. 48sec.; Harpie, 4h. 7min. 42sec.; Tritonia, 4h. 10min. 33sec.; Lotos, 4h. 12min. 43sec. This showing a further gain to the Carina of 29 seconds on the Harpy, the former being now 3min. 54sec. ahead. She had, however, run very level with the Tritonia, only gaining 3 seconds upon the latter. The second thrash to windward began after rounding this point, and the Carina showed herself quite equal to the occasion. The weather mark was brought abeam at following times:—Carina, 4 hours 50 minutes 6 seconds; Harpie, 4 hours 54 minutes 14 seconds; Tritonia, 4 hours 58 minutes. Then came the Lotos, Peri, and Ruby in the order named, the Warringa not going round. Again the Carina more than held her own, the time showing again on the Harpie of 14 seconds, and on the Tritonia of 1 minute 8 seconds, which was very even sailing. The Harpie, in trying to cut off a corner, grounded on the Sow and Pigs, and for some minutes was in a very nasty position but the club steamer towed her off, probably none the worse for her hard knocking. Great praise is due to Captain Amora for the very able way in which he went about the business. Mr. Milson sent a boat off with a stout Manila hawser for the purpose, so that with the assistance of his boat and rope the Harpie was afloat in as short a time as could possibly be expected. Beyond this adventure the reach and run-up was uneventful, and the yachts finished up as follows:—Carina, 5 hours 35 minutes 35 seconds; Lotos, 5 hours 44 minutes 5 seconds; Tritonia, 5 hours 44 minutes 25 seconds. The Carina, therefore, won with 8 minutes 30 seconds to spare from the Lotos, as they started even; and with 10 minutes 50 seconds from the Tritonia, including the time allowance of 2 minutes. Captain Gascoigne must be congratulated on his first win, though only against cruising boats. His vessel seems to be going better, and when he gets more used to her ways he will no doubt hold his own with the faster ones. The club steamer Halcyon was well attended, and the afternoon thoroughly enjoyed by those on board. Mr. Fred. Bennett, hon. secretary of the club, was in charge.

SYDNEY AMATEUR CANVAS DINGY CLUB.

The first handicap race in connection with the S. A. C. D. Club was sailed on Saturday afternoon last. The first prize was a new suit of sails presented by Mr. F. Punch, and the second a trophy given by Mr. Gibbs (Gibbs, Shallard, and Co.). Out of 18 entries, 15 started, namely:—Thomas Punch, Violet, Chance, Bessie, Fedora, Blanche, Cerise and Blue, Clio, Pearle, Hermione, Estrella, and Olivette at scratch, and Daisy with 5 minutes, Spray with 5 minutes, and Venus with 16 minutes' handicap. The start was not a very good one, the Thomas Punch and Cerise and Blue getting a slight advantage. The boats went away on the starboard tack, and then went about, nearly all working to the northern shore. The Latona, Old Tom, and Ella came up very late, and consequently did not go the course. On the run back the Cerise and Blue carried away her bobstay. This lost her a good bit of ground, and put her out of a place. Thomas Punch rounded the flagboat first at 4h. 12m. 15s., followed by Pearle, 4h. 13m. 40s.; Chance, 4h. 18m. 40s.; Bessie and Violet, 4h. 19m. 50s. The others rounded in the following order:—Hermione, Olivette, Estrella, Fedora, Cerise and Blue, Clio, Blanche, Daisy, and Venus. On the beat to Pinchgut the Pearle gained considerably on the Thomas Punch, but was not able to catch her. The Thomas Punch rounded first, her time being 4h. 30m. 15s.; Pearle, 4h. 31m.; Chance, 4h. 38m. 15s.; Bessie, 4h. 39m. 45s.; followed by Hermione, Olivette, Fedora, Estrella, Blanche, and Clio. The Thomas Punch thus won by 45 seconds, and the Pearle takes the second prize. The winner was sailed by Mr. G. Holmes. Messrs. A. Dunn and F. J. Eichler discharged the duties of starter and umpire respectively, and gave every satisfaction.

WELCOME TO BEACH.

The executive committee met at the Oxford Hotel on Saturday evening. Dr. H. J. Tarrant, M.L.A., presided. Amongst those present were Messrs. J. Hunt, Captain Lee, Dr. Byrne, F. Punch, C. W. Beale, C. Bros, G. Thornton, and Messrs. F. J. Smith and R. Atkinson Price, hon. secretaries, and others.

After the routine business had been disposed of, several letters were read, including a list of contributions which had been received. It was decided that Messrs. Price, Bros, and Smith be requested to draft an address of welcome for presentation to the champion on his arrival, and that Messrs. Hunt, Punch, and Thornton see to the execution of the design. It was decided that efforts be made to secure the assistance of private citizens having drags, &c., for the procession. The following programme was decided upon as to the form which the procession and reception should take:—Upon the arrival of the Lusitania at Albany the champion will be wired to, when he will be requested to place himself in the hands of the committee. Remaining a few days in the colonies en route, he will enter the Heads by steamer, Mr. Yuill of the Orient Co. being requested to moor the vessel near the Heads until 3.30, when a flotilla of steamers representing the various rowing clubs and flying their respective flags, headed by the executive boat containing members of the Rowing Association and Executive Committee will meet the Lusitania. The champion will be taken upon the committee's boat, and the procession will return to Prince's Stairs, where the landing will take place at 4 o'clock. Invitations will also be issued to the various rowing and sailing clubs, requesting the members to turn out in full uniform and form in the procession, the arrangements as to place, &c., to be in the hands of the Rowing Association. From the Princes Stairs the champion will be conveyed in a drag to the Town Hall, where the Mayor will officially welcome him, and present an address from, and on behalf of the colonists; admission to the Town Hall to be by ticket, both ladies and gentlemen—tickets to be given on application to all subscribers of one guinea and over. After the reception, the champion will be driven to the committee rooms. It was decided to invite representatives from the other colonies, and also the English cricketers present. It was further decided to invite the champion to a picnic and banquet upon the Thursday after his arrival, arrangements for same to be made by Tuesday next, when a special general meeting of the committee will be held for the purpose of making final arrangements in connection with the reception.

CRICKET.

RILEY CUP.—SURRY UNITED v. CONSERVATIVE C. C.—This match, the last and most interesting of the first round, was commenced on Saturday last on the southern wicket, Agricultural Ground. The Conservatives, winning the toss, batted first, and put together 95 runs before they were all got rid of. Ormiston was top scorer with 35, compiled by tireless defence and really fine cricket. Cleland 17, Hargraves 12, and Windeyer 10 were the only other batsmen who got into double figures. Hume was the most successful bowler for the Surrys, capturing six wickets for 48 runs. Thomson bowled well, but with hard luck. The start of the Surry innings was most disastrous, Searle and Cottam being both dismissed in Evers' first over without scoring; but no further wickets fell, J. Beveridge and R. Brewster playing faultless and steady cricket for 32, not out, and 22, not out, respectively—the score being two wickets for 55. The match will be resumed on December 11. Scores:—

SYDNEY v. CAMPERDOWN.—This match, played at Camperdown, resulted in a win for Sydney, the scores being—Sydney 67, Camperdown 29; Webb 15, Dunn 14, Todd 10, being highest scorers for Sydney, and for Camperdown Morgan 10. Kelly with five wickets for 13 runs, Dunn, three for 14, did the bowling for Sydney, Morgan being most successful for the losers, getting five wickets. Sydney in their second innings lost four wickets for 65; Goer 22, G. Crisp 21 (not out). Crisp had one 7, two 6's, and two singles in his score.

WARNE AND REID v. A. M'ARTHUR AND CO.—This match was played at Rushcutter Bay, when, after a close and exciting game, the former won by one run, the scores being—Warne and Reid, 87; A. M'Arthur and Co., 86. The batting of Cooke (20), Montague (15), Pepper (13), and Robertson (12), and the bowling of Robertson, Groat, and Cooke, was very good; while for the losers Mortimer (10) and Alderson (40 not out) was splendid. Booth and Mortimer shared the bowling honours. Warne and Reid played two men short.

BRISBANE, SATURDAY.

At a meeting of the Junior Cricket Association last night, the letter from Mr. F. J. Ironsides, of Sydney, in regard to bringing a team of juniors to Brisbane to play against the juniors, here was further considered. After a long discussion it was decided that the secretary write to Mr. Ironsides, stating that this association is not at present in a position to receive a team from the New South Wales juniors at Christmas, owing to the association being only in its infancy, and junior cricket hardly far enough advanced yet to cope with New South Wales junior cricket.

MR. GOODCHAP AT BOURKE.

In our issue of Friday last we published an account of a public meeting held at Bourke on the 18th instant for the purpose of expressing indignation at the alleged neglect of the Commissioner for Railways to advise the inhabitants of that town of his recent visit. We learn that the visit of the Commissioner was purely departmental in character, and that he by no means neglected to ascertain the requirements of the public in connection with the department he controls. He was accompanied by the Engineer for Existing Lines, the District Engineer, and the Traffic Manager; and the object of his visit was not confined to the requirements of Bourke, but embraced the inspection of every station on the Western line and its branches, including the facilities afforded for yarding and trucking stock, to which important matter special attention was given, and the necessary directions issued for the remedying of defects. It is thought by the department, however, that the people of Bourke labour under an entire misconception of the functions properly pertaining to an executive officer of the Government. They say no matter how high the position of such a functionary, he is responsible to the Government, and not to the people, and it is no part of his duty to publicly announce his visits of departmental inspection, or act in any degree in a representative character. On the contrary, were he to do so he would very probably incur displeasure for trenching upon the functions belonging exclusively to the Ministerial head of the department. But the department thinks there has been something less pardonable than misconception in the present case. They have copies of telegrams which have passed between the editor of the Bourke Telegraph and the Commissioner for Railways, the text of which we reproduce. The department say that either the Commissioner's telegram was purposely withheld from the meeting—for it is said on the authority of the Telegraph Department that it was duly delivered to the editor of the Bourke Telegraph on the morning of the 16th,—or resolutions condemnatory of the Commissioner's action were passed at that meeting with a full knowledge of the courteous explanation of that gentleman contained in the telegram referred to. If the former were the case, an explanation should be given; if the latter, the Bourke people must be sadly in want of a proper grievance, and their conduct is not likely to excite the sympathy of their fellow-colonists. The following is a copy of the telegrams:—From Bourke Station, November 15, 1886. To Commissioner for Railways, Sydney: "Publicly stated you visited Bourke last week; is this so? If not true I will correct rumour. Kindly reply. (Signed) Editor Bourke Telegraph." Reply: "Your inquiry by wire received. I started from Sydney on Wednesday morning to make an inspection of all stations on the Western line and its branches. The inspection was purely for Departmental purposes. On Thursday, by 8.30 p.m., I had not inspected beyond Dubbo. As I could not inspect at night, I directed that train should run through to Bourke, which we reached at 4 a.m., and the inspection between Bourke and Dubbo commenced at 5 a.m. The examination of Bourke Station, &c., was concluded by 8 a.m., when train left. On my return to Sydney on Sunday night heard that the municipal authorities at Bourke wished to interview me on railway matters. Though the object of my visit or the time at my disposal did not embrace this purpose, still I should have courteously waited the convenience of the authorities had I been made aware of their wishes in the matter. The information derived from my visit to Bourke, short as it necessarily was, will enable me to deal promptly with any suggestion which the residents or their representatives may have to make in regard to railway matters, and I shall be glad to give them immediate attention. I much regret any disappointment which I inadvertently contributed to.—(Signed) CH. A. G. 15th November, 1886."

PROPOSED INSPECTOR OF GAS.

On November the 1st, Mr. John Meeks, M.L.A., addressed the following letter to the Colonial Secretary, in which he suggested that the Government should appoint an inspector of gas, and take other means to ensure the article supplied to the people being of proper quality:—

"Sydney, November 1, 1886.

"Sir,—I have the honour to apply to you for certain information with regard to the supplying of gas to the people of Sydney and the suburbs. I have noticed from the newspapers that representatives of the Gas Company have waited upon you and desired you to appoint a Government inspector of gas. I have taken a great deal of interest in this question, and I would submit that instead of there being a Government inspector, an officer should be appointed under the Sydney Municipal Council, who would have power to inspect not only the meters but the quality of the gas supplied to the people. As one instance of the necessity for such an officer, I would point out that the council in question pay about £16,000 per annum without there being, in my opinion, an efficient check upon the consumption. I understand that the Government have already recognised the importance of this subject, and I would like to know whether it is their intention to bring in a general gas bill during the forthcoming session.

"JOHN MEEKS."

To this letter the hon. gentleman has received the following reply:—

"Sydney, 16th November, 1886.

"Sir,—In reply to your letter of the 1st instant, regarding the supply of gas to the city and suburbs, I am directed to inform you that the subject is one that requires serious consideration, and that the Colonial Secretary, who is of opinion that the Government should appoint an inspector, both of meter and quality of gas, will bring the matter before his colleagues at an early date.

"CRITCHETT WALKER, Principal Under Secretary."

We understand that the principal banks have in contemplation the early reduction of deposit and discount rates. We believe that most of the banks in Victoria, South Australia, and New South Wales favour this policy. The early receipt of the proceeds of the wool and wheat must tend to reduce overdrafts and give an easier position to the money market.

Wine merchants are now directing their attention to the produce of our vineyards. By the Cuzco, which left last week, Mr. J. T. Fallon filled an order from a leading London firm of wine merchants, that vessel taking a large shipment of 10 hogsheads and 30 casks picked samples of the highest-class wines of the Albury cellars. Other extensive orders are announced for early shipment. According to Bradstreets the production of wool in the Argentine Republic during the coming season is likely to be greatly reduced, owing mainly to the great losses of sheep sustained during the past winter. The estimates of the deficiency—comparing the results of the coming clip with those of the last one—are variously estimated at from 30,000 to 50,000 bales. A recognised authority, Mr. Lix-Klett, puts down the deficit, says the Manchester Guardian, as 40,000 bales, or 36,000,000lb. The normal production of the country is 260,000,000lb. The following table shows the quantity of wool exported from the River Plate from October 1 to July 15 in the present and preceding season:—

	bales.	bales.
France	152,336	149,167
Germany	87,321	42,835
Belgium	54,862	75,865
Other countries	20,628	17,330
Totals	315,147	284,196

It appears, therefore, than the shipments of this season have so far fallen short of those of the corresponding portion of 1884-85 by nearly 31,000 bales. It is expected therefore that the clip of 1886-87 will prove all least 70,000 bales less than that of 1884-85, which however, was the largest on record.

THE COLOURED SUPPLEMENT to the CHRISTMAS NUMBER of the SYDNEY MAIL.

"CHRISTMAS BELLS."

The COLOURED SUPPLEMENT which the Proprietors of the SYDNEY MAIL intend presenting with the Christmas number of that journal has been pronounced by competent authorities to be one of the MOST BEAUTIFULLY-EXECUTED PICTURES in colour, ever prepared in the colony. It is reproduced from a PRIZE DESIGN by Mrs. STODDARD, for which £100 was awarded.

The picture (25 x 20 inches) is entitled "Christmas Bells." The subject is a child some four or five years old resting on a log in the bush, with an armful of Christmas bells, which she has been gathering. It is a thoughtful and beautiful design, and is one of the happiest efforts of the accomplished artist, both in regard to the subject and its effective treatment.

THE SUPPLEMENT will be presented to each subscriber to the MAIL.

Orders for copies should be forwarded to local agents, or to this office, without delay.

The price of the CHRISTMAS NUMBER OF THE MAIL, including the COLOURED SUPPLEMENT, will be SIXPENCE.

The number will contain a series of BEAUTIFUL ENGRAVINGS, and will be replete with interesting matter.

The Sydney Morning Herald.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 22, 1886.

In refusing to dissolve Parliament in an irregular way Lord Carrington has acted just as any constitutional Governor might have been expected to do. He was asked to adopt an extraordinary and almost unprecedented course on grounds that were quite inadequate, and he has declined to be led away; he was invited to take a perilous leap in the dark, but he has preferred to keep in the safe paths of the Constitution. He may be criticised in some quarters, perhaps, for returning an immediate answer to the petitions, instead of receiving them in customary form and replying to them afterwards; but having thoroughly made up his mind on the subject, he adopted a manly and straightforward course in announcing his decision at once. We have his assurance that the conclusion he has come to was arrived at after mature consideration and anxious thought, and he may rest satisfied that the country will not misinterpret or misunderstand his conduct. His Excellency has well weighed the matter, and the fact that he has given a prompt reply will be accepted, not as an indication of rashness or precipitancy, but as a proof that he sees before him a line of duty clear and unmistakeable, from which it is impossible to deviate.

Lord Carrington does not say that it would never be the duty of a Governor to dissolve Parliament in opposition to the views of the Ministry for the time being. "It is possible," he says, "to conceive circumstances of grave national moment, in which the Sovereign or her representative, not being in accord with the Ministers of the day on some great question of State policy, might be compelled, as a last resort to take the extreme course of dissolving Parliament, notwithstanding the refusal of the Ministry, commanding a working majority, to recommend such a course." It is unnecessary to say that in the present case circumstances of the kind referred to by his Excellency have no existence. There is no question upon which the Governor and his advisers disagree, while the Ministry has not merely a working majority in the popular branch of the Legislature, but a very large, indeed an almost overwhelming majority. The ground upon which a dissolution is asked for is that neither the Ministry nor the Assembly represents the country—that the Ministry is disapproved of, and that the members who have kept the Government in power have lost the confidence of the constituencies. But there is no proof that the Assembly has ceased to represent the country. The public meetings that have been held, and the petitions that have been signed, show that dissatisfaction exists; but they do not prove that the present House has entirely lost the confidence of the great body of the electors. The Governor cannot shut his eyes to the fact that the members who now sit in the Assembly were elected only a year ago, and there is nothing before him to show that the majority of them hold their seats in opposition to the wishes of those who sent them there. Neither the public meetings nor the petitions prove that such is the fact. As to the petitions, if they prove anything, they prove the contrary. It was stated by Mr. Martin on Saturday that the signatures to the petitions laid before the Governor represented in the aggregate 23,000 electors. Now, according to the official statistics, the number of electors on the rolls for the year 1885 was 232,190, so that the petitions represent as nearly as possible one-tenth of the whole voting power. How, in the face of this, can the petitioners be said to represent the country?

His Excellency has watched the course of events all through; and he has come to the conclusion that there is nothing whatever to justify him in assuming that the system of Government that he was sent here to administer is a failure. "I consider it my clear duty," he says, "to withhold my consent from a proposition which would involve me in the admission that the ordinary working of your beneficent Constitution had been capable of producing a collapse so complete and so hopeless as the petitioners allege to have occurred." These are statesmanlike words, and they are also the words of common sense. The clamour for a penal dissolution has been made in a moment of excitement, without any thought of the possible consequences on the part of those who make the demand. The course that the Governor has been asked to take really contemplates, as his Excellency points out, the collapse of the Constitution. Why should such violent measures be proposed? The utmost duration of a New South Wales Parliament is three years, but its average life is probably not half as long as that; and if experience is to count for anything, the electors may expect before very long to have an opportunity of dealing with their representatives in the ordinary course of events.

It must be borne in mind—and this point has all through been kept too much in the background—that the Governor has been asked to do something very much more serious than to cut short the existence of Parliament, although that in itself is not a matter of trifling moment. It is apparent, from the constitutional authorities whose opinions we quoted on Saturday, that a Governor cannot dissolve Parliament on his own motion. If he proposes to dissolve, and his Ministers are unable to agree with him, they must retire, and their places be taken by others who will counsel a dissolution. The point is put very clearly by Todd, who says that, "If an existing Administration be not prepared to accept the Governor's decision in regard to a proposed dissolution, and to assume the responsibility for the same, they are bound to resign office, and give place to other Ministers who are willing to facilitate and to become responsible to Parliament and to the country for the intended exercise of the Royal prerogative." It follows that if Lord Carrington had granted the request that was made to him, the present Ministry must have disappeared, and their places have been taken by a Ministry chosen from the Opposition—a Ministry that would have represented neither the Assembly nor the country. Can it be contended for a moment that such a state of things would be in accordance with constitutional government, or, indeed, with any sound system of government?

It may be urged, of course, that the Opposition represent the country, but, as we have shown, there is no evidence of that whatever. The agitation, moreover, is against the existing Government, not in favour of some Government that might be formed from the Opposition benches; and it is more than probable that if a dissolution were to take place under the circumstances we have described, the usurping Government—for practically such a Ministry would be usurpers—would be disowned by the country, and turned out of office as soon as Parliament met. In that case the Governor who granted the dissolution, and strained the Constitution in doing so, would have laid himself open to severe censure. A Governor who dissolved Parliament in opposition to the advice of his Ministers would incur a serious responsibility under any circumstances, and before taking a step of that sort he would make sure that he had ample grounds for departing from rule and precedent. There are no such grounds in our own case, and Lord Carrington recognises the fact. He has adopted a wise, prudent, and constitutional course, and he is to be commended accordingly. That his decision will please everybody is not at all likely—it will, of course, displease the petitioners, and perhaps others besides. But all will recognise that his Excellency has acted conscientiously and from a high sense of duty, and we feel sure that those who appealed to him will loyally accept his verdict.

The Premier is to be congratulated on the tone of his speech at Dubbo. In moderation, if not in dignity, it was worthy of the head of the Government. It is satisfactory to find that by one Minister at least it is perceived that the position of the Government, amidst accusations from all sides, is not to be improved by the use of offensive language and recrimination. Sir Patrick Jennings has not damaged the cause of the Government by a mistake of that sort, but at the same time it can hardly be said that his deliverances at Dubbo have materially strengthened it. Men of candour and men not suffering from the disturbing influences of partisanship have all along recognised the difficulties which the Government has had to encounter, and to them there is little new in the really solid portions of the defence now raised; but for them, as well as for the sworn enemies of the Government, it was a waste of words to repeat the old formulas that were worn out in the Assembly months ago.

The Premier made some remarks about the petitions for a dissolution which have been the cause of so much controversy. When he spoke of the course adopted as one "unheard of," he overstated the case. Such movements have been heard of before. The weakness of the position taken up by the petitioners is to be found in the fact that whilst Parliament is not yet a year old, and as Ministers have been throughout in command of a substantial majority, there is nothing before the Governor of sufficient weight to induce him to adopt the certainly "most extraordinary" course of dismissing the Ministry, calling together new advisers, and dissolving Parliament. There can be little doubt that if his Excellency had granted the prayer of the petitioners, and taken the necessary preliminary steps which the petitioners, whether wilfully or ignorantly, failed to pray for, he would, under the circumstances, have exposed himself to the charge of being either a partisan or the instrument of a party.

Sir Patrick Jennings claims consideration for the Government on the ground of the difficulties of the situation at the time when he took office. He entered upon his duties with a deficit of £1,300,000 bequeathed to him. Sir Alexander Stuart in 1883 began with a surplus of £1,800,000. Sir Henry Parkes began in 1878 with a surplus of nearly two millions and a half. So far the claim to consideration is a fair one. The position of a Government that has to impose fresh taxation and to retrieve the credit of the colony in times of depression is very different from that of a Government which accepts office in prosperous times and has the opportunity of distributing a heavy surplus amongst a grateful people. But as the Premier himself admits, there should be honesty and earnestness where the claim to consideration is to be recognised. The Government might have shown its earnestness in a more effective way; and as to its honesty, seeing that the Premier's present explanation is simply a reiteration in substance of the old explanation which was so often put forward in Parliament last session to the disgust of everybody, the less said upon that point the better. It is marvellous that the Premier can go back again and again to his professions at the time of his election for a vindication of his subsequent conduct when in his addresses to the electors are to be found the words of the indictment upon which he has been tried and found guilty. The Premier quoted on Saturday night his declaration of March last, that it was not the intention of the Government to fall in with the views of those who would take advantage of our present situation to tide us over a temporary difficulty by "disregarding the leading principles upon which alike the fiscal policy of the country and its present prosperity have been for a considerable time based." We say "A fig for your intentions when, as a matter of fact, and probably as a matter of choice, you have actually fallen in with the views of those very people, when you have promoted their cause, put them in a ferment of exultant agitation, and won their support."

We say that the adoption of this course was a matter of choice, because the Government, after the Premier's election manifesto had been delivered, had a radically different course open to it in fulfilment of all the pledges then given. The Premier says that at his nomination he promised to seek additional revenue from four sources—Customs, stamps, income tax, and a land tax—and that the measures foreshadowed in his financial statement were in accordance with the promise so made. This is little better than trifling with the question. At his election he said a great deal more than that he would go to the Customs. He stated positively that in a certain direction he would not go, and the words he used were such as might have been specially chosen to destroy any hope on the part of the protectionists. He might in following out that promise have gone to the Customs for as much additional revenue as he now expects to raise without doing anything to disturb the course of trade or to prepare in any degree the way for protection. The Government could not have been ignorant of this. When the opposite course was taken it must have been deliberately chosen. The Premier repeats once more the stale assertion that five per cent. ad valorem duties imposed for revenue purposes are not protection. He ridicules the idea that because certain gentlemen holding protectionist views supported the Government the Customs Bill was protection; and he says that to raise the question of free trade or protection at all on that bill was a most fictitious way of dealing with the subject. He has apparently lost the faculty of discriminating between fact and fiction. He has persistently ignored the facts of the situation. He says that nothing could justify such opposition as was shown to the bill unless it were based upon some great principle. The fact was that the whole controversy between free trade and protection was raised by the action of the Government in choosing to go to the Customs by the road which the protectionists were sure to favour, instead of by the road which freetraders would prefer. The fiction is to be found in the statements which would lead us to believe that this view of the matter had not occurred to the Government.

The Premier explains that whilst the deficit of £1,300,000 which faced him on his acceptance of office was bequeathed by his predecessor, its increase since has been caused by the necessary fulfilment of engagements and by the decline of revenue through the prevailing depression and other causes. The non-receipt of increased pastoral rentals under the new Act is one of these, but that, he hopes, will be made good next year. Mr. Farnell's estimate of one and a half millions or more he considers excessive, and he sets down the probable amount per annum during the first five years at £600,000 or £700,000. Mr. Burns estimated the railway revenue for the year at £720,000; his own original estimate was less by £218,000, but he now expects the receipts to be short of that amount by £100,000. The Customs and Excise revenue, including the new duties, are now expected to yield about a quarter of a million less than the original estimate. It is easy to understand the growth of the deficit without saying anything about unnecessary or extravagant expenditure.

For the future there is a distinct promise that the Land Tax Bill and the Income Tax Bill shall be reintroduced. The Premier considers the Government bound to push the whole of his financial scheme, and declares his willingness to go to the country, if necessary, upon it. The new Land Bill is also placed amongst the measures of first importance. The Railway Management Bill, a Water Conservation Bill, and a Local Government Bill occupy more doubtful positions; and finally, it may be remarked, the Premier is hopeful that neither his Government nor any other in the future possessing a majority in the House will be met by wilful obstruction. It is too much in these days to expect that such a hope will be fulfilled.

Probably there were few present at the Randwick Cemetery on Saturday afternoon who remembered that when the man of genius was laid away in his narrow house on a dreary winter day a few years ago but twenty of all who had read and admired his poems uncovered as the earth fell upon his coffin. Now hundreds assemble to do his name posthumous honour. Yet KENDALL was not unrecognised in his lifetime. From the public at large there came to him hearty acknowledgment, from influential quarters encouragement and kindness, and at length from the Government an official position. Nor since his death have his widow or children been forgotten, and if all the labour of raising a small competence for them, and funds for the purchase of this monument, has fallen upon the very few, still it is to the credit of the public that there has been so frank a response to the solicitation. The significance of Saturday's proceedings reaches beyond a mere acknowledgment of HENRY KENDALL'S talent. It is an avowal from the people of New South Wales that they are not unmindful in their vigorous busy life of the claims that literature and art make upon them, and the tender care shown in this instance is a premonition of what may be when there has arisen, as there must, a school of Australian literature. Many an abler man than this has fallen by the way in older and richer countries where literary patronage has become a social affectation, and yet scarcely enough money has been gathered together to erect decent headstones. Of course monuments will not feed the living or bring repose to the dead, and posthumous fame is very like a pyramid of bread on a tombstone, but they still are expressions visible and honourable of regard and appreciation. The distinguishing mark of this ceremonial of Saturday is that it comes not from the Government, but from the people; it is social not official, and so long as Australia nurses and fosters the brethren of her own household, we may be sure what she regards worthily in due time will be regarded thus by other lands.

The defeat of the English cricketers on Saturday was a surprise to the whole community. The team is the strongest that has ever visited Australia, and the general belief was that it would win almost every match that it played in Australia. On paper it was very much stronger than the one to which it was opposed on Saturday, and not many people would have expressed astonishment if it had won the match with an innings to spare. The Englishmen attribute their defeat to the state of the ground, but in this respect it cannot be said that they were at a disadvantage compared with their opponents. The ground was similar for both parties. If either side had the advantage it was the visitors, for they won the toss, and had the privilege of deciding who should go to the wickets first. All cricketing experts agree that this advantage under ordinary conditions of weather is equal to a great number of runs. In addition to this they had also an advantage in regard to the light. During nearly the whole of the time that the Englishmen were at the wickets on Saturday the sun was shining brightly; but when the local team went in the sky was overcast, and long before six o'clock the light had become very bad. In order to complete the game on Saturday, the captain of the local team agreed to play after the time arranged for drawing the stumps. Under the circumstances, that was a risky course to take, and it was protested against by one of the batsmen. It certainly gave a great opportunity to the bowlers, and they made the best of it. The victory achieved by our cricketers was due to the excellent bowling of TURNER and FERRIS, and to the batting of MOSES, BANNERMAN, and M'DONNELL. Better bowling than TURNER'S has never been seen on the Association Ground, and, as the analysis shows, he was nearly unplayable. The batting of BANNERMAN and MOSES was also of a very high order. That of the latter is deserving of special commendation. The whole strength of the English bowling was arrayed against him without success. The match was a bowlers' match. It has been remarked lately that in cricket the defence is now much stronger that the attack; and it has been suggested that the wickets should be made wider so that the two forces might be equalised. But from what occurred on Saturday it would appear that the remark is true only when the turf on which a match is played is dry; when it is wet the attack breaks through the defence with comparative ease. The proverbial uncertainty of cricket was well illustrated in Saturday's match. The pick of the cricketers of all the colonies went home this year and got badly beaten, not only by the flower of English cricket, but by county elevens. A team consisting for the most part of the men who overthrew our champions comes out here, and is fairly defeated by a weak eleven representing only one of the colonies. It would be unwise to predict from that facts however, that the Englishmen will again suffer defeat at the hands of a New South Wales team. The result of the recent contest will greatly increase the interest in the matches that are to be played.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Our cablegrams this morning record the death of Mr. C. A. Arthur who, having been elected by the people of the United States to the position of Vice-president, became President after the assassination of Mr. Garfield in 1881. An obituary notice will be found in another column.

THE English mails dated London, 15th October, ex P. and O. Company's steamer Shannon will be due to-morrow in time for delivery to boxholders and from windows A to Z about 9 a.m., per city carriers 11.30 a.m., and suburban carriers 2 p.m.

WE have received the following memorandum from the Electric Telegraph Department:—"Hongkong notifies (November 19) that both the Hongkong and Shanghai cables are interrupted. Messages are sent by the Chinese lines, via Foochow, at the same charge."

SIR PATRICK JENNINGS proceeded by special train to Dubbo on Saturday morning. He reached his destination at 10 minutes to 5 o'clock p.m., and the same evening he delivered an address in the Masonic Hall, Dubbo, on the political situation. He was met at the station by Mr. Narcisse Müller, the Mayor of the town, and several other gentlemen, and was conducted by them to the Royal Hotel. At his meeting the chair was occupied by Mr. Muller, and there was an attendance of electors that quite filled the hall. The hon. gentleman spoke for two hours and three-quarters, and received a most attentive hearing. He referred to the heavy deficit which had been bequeathed to his Government by preceding Administrations, and accounted for its increase by stating that there had been a falling off in the land, railway, and other revenue. He defended the Government against the accusation that they were extravagant, and were dilitary in the conduct of public business. He also declared that they intended to adhere to such of their taxation proposals as were not passed last session, and would introduce other measures including bills for conserving water and regulating the Civil Service. When he had concluded a vote of continued confidence in him was carried by a large majority. The hon. gentleman left Dubbo at midnight on Saturday, and reached Sydney at 25 minutes past 10 o'clock yesterday morning. It is worthy of remark that the country from Lithgow to Dubbo now presents a most refreshing appearance. Rain has fallen with apparent abundance, and the land is yielding bounteous crops. Trees, shrubs, herbage, and grass are flourishing more luxuriantly than they have done for years. In some places, indeed, grass four and five feet high was observable, and on each side of the route there were prospects of good harvests.

IN the absence of the Premier and Colonial Secretary from town, no further steps have been taken with regard to the Chief Justiceship, but Mr. Julian Salomons, Q.C., has, we understand, addressed a communication to the Premier relative to the letters written to the newspapers by their Honors Mr. Justice Faucett, Sir William Manning, and Mr. Justice Windeyer.

ON Saturday afternoon his Excellency the Governor unveiled the monument which has recently been erected in Waverley cemetery to the memory of the Australian poet, Henry Kendall. His Excellency and Lady Carrington, attended by Lord Bertie, arrived at the entrance gates at 3 p.m., and were received by the Mayor of Waverley (Mr. W. Martin) and the Right Hon. W. B. Dalley, P.C. The vice-regal party were at once conducted to a platform in front of the poet's grave, around which was a large assemblage, including many prominent citizens. The site upon which the monument stands is at the north-east corner of the vault section of the Church of England burial ground, and was given by the Waverley Council for the purpose to which it has been put. About five weeks since the remains of the deceased were removed from that part of the cemetery known as the selected section to their present resting-place. The monument which now surmounts them rises to a height of 25 feet above the adjacent pathway, and is of Italian marble. It exhibits three columns resting upon a blue-stone pedestal, which, in its turn, is affixed to a base of blue granite inlaid with marble. Each column supports an urn, upon which is depicted a scroll and some drapery. The choice and substantial memorial bears the inscription, "Here lies Henry Kendall, poet: Born 18th April, 1841; died 1st August, 1882. Some of those who loved and admired him have in grateful and lasting remembrance of his genius built this monument above his ashes." Beneath this writing appear the words of Shelley—

"Awake him not! Surely he takes his fill
Of deep and liquid rest, forgetful of all ill."

His Excellency having unveiled the monument, the Right Hon. W. B. Dalley delivered an address, and the proceedings shortly afterwards terminated.

ON Saturday morning a deputation, comprising between 50 and 60 gentlemen, including those who had acted as chairmen of the indignation meetings which had been held in the city and suburbs with regard to the question of dissolving Parliament, waited upon his Excellency the Governor at Government House, and presented to him a large number of petitions in favour of a dissolution of Parliament. The deputation was introduced by Mr. W. F. Martin, who read to his Excellency an address setting forth the objects of the interview. His Excellency, in replying to the deputation, pointed out that the Government had defeated by large majorities every specific motion in the Legislative Assembly condemning their policy and administration, and that proved, as far as he was entitled to inquire, that they had the confidence at present of a substantial majority of those elected under the free and liberal franchise enjoyed by the colony. Therefore, after mature consideration and anxious thought—after having carefully weighed all that had been set forth in the petitions and elsewhere—he considered it his clear duty to withhold his assent to a proposition which would involve him in the admission that the ordinary working of the constitution had been capable of producing a collapse so complete and so hopeless as the petitioners had alleged to have occurred. A report of the interview appears in another portion of the paper.

SIR THOMAS M'ILWRAITH was a passenger by the Barcoo (s.), which arrived from Brisbane yesterday.

ON Saturday 150 men of the Naval Brigade proceeded to George's Head by steamer to engage in shot practice with the smooth-bore guns at that battery for prizes given by the New South Wales Rifle Association. There was a moderate breeze from the N.E. blowing across the range. Only hollow shot were available, as usual, which rendered good shooting very difficult. Two targets were laid down at a distance of 1700 yards. The firing was remarkably good—the shot falling close round the target from the commencement of the practice, the 10th passing clean through the cask, and the 14th demolishing it altogether. The guns were then laid for the remaining target, which, though it had many close shaves, was not touched. Captain Lindeman was in command, assisted by Lieutenants Deloitte, Cohen, and Milson. Commander Lewington and Mr. Foskett scored on behalf of the Rifle Association. The match will be continued on the 4th proximo.

A GENERAL parade of a portion of the Metropolitan Volunteers, including the Sydney Lancers, a field battery of the Volunteer Artillery, the 1st and 2nd Infantry Brigades, and the Naval Artillery Volunteers, took place at Moore Park on Saturday afternoon. The parade was ordered for the purpose of instructing the men in divisional drill, in close formation. The 1st Brigade was under the command of Colonel Goodlet, and the 2nd Brigade was commanded by Colonel Eden. There were over 1000 volunteers present. The men were formed up in line of quarter-columns, six paces interval, facing west by 3.30 p.m., and after Major-General Richardson and his staff had arrived on the ground, the troops marched past at wheeling distance and at quarter-column distance. The Volunteer Artillery and the Naval Artillery Volunteers marched past remarkably well, but the marching of some of the other regiments was rather indifferent. Line was then reformed, and the men were put through several echelon movements. They were also exercised in receiving cavalry in line and square formation, during which time volley-firing was carried on by the infantry and the field battery was in action. The movements were, on the whole, fairly well performed, and as the object of these drills in close formation is to teach the men to act together in large bodies, and to enable them to keep steady when they are drilling in open order, the lessons imparted on Saturday afternoon should prove highly instructive to our "citizen soldiers," many of whom are making forward strides towards proficiency in the respective branches of the service to which they belong. The troops, accompanied by their bands, left the Park shortly before 6 p.m.

ON Saturday the match between the English Eleven and an eleven representing New South Wales was brought to an unexpected conclusion at the Association Cricket Ground, in the presence of about 12,000 spectators. It had been anticipated that the match would extend over at least three days, but the colonials won by good cricket, with six wickets to spare. Particulars of the match will be found in another column. The English Eleven are to play at Goulburn on Friday and Saturday next.

ON Saturday night rain fell heavily in the metropolitan district, and yesterday morning there was every appearance of the wet weather continuing, but although the sky was obscured by clouds during the greater part of the day the rain held off. Generally fine warm weather was reported from the country districts on Saturday morning, but it was cloudy and unsettled on parts of the coast and mountains and showery at Port Stephens, while rain had fallen at a few scattered stations in the eastern division.

IN M'Combill v. Sanders et al. trustees of the Bricklayers' Benefit Society, heard recently before District Court Judge Dowling, in which the plaintiff sought to recover accident pay from the society, the plaintiff was nonsuited without costs on a legal point, viz., that under Act No. 12, of 1881 (Trade Union Act), section 4, it is not competent for any court to entertain any legal proceedings instituted for directly enforcing or recovering damages for (amongst other things) providing benefits to members. His Honor expressed sympathy with the plaintiff (an aged man), but considered himself bound by the Act, and therefore gave no costs. It is worthy of note in connection with this matter that in the society's rules, which we understand are in their general principles similar to those of all benefit societies, no arbitration clause is included, and no provision made whereby members of the society may recover benefits they allege to be due to them.

A LARGE seizure of contraband goods was made at North Shore in a rather unexpected way early on Saturday morning. At about half-past 3, Police-constable Williams, while on duty in Alfred-street, noticed a Chinaman with a large bundle, and he went forward and asked what was in it. Without waiting to answer, the Celestial dropped the bundle and ran off as fast as he could. The constable followed in pursuit, but being unable to catch him, he returned to Alfred-street, where he examined the bundle, and found that it contained cigars and tobacco. It was then removed to the police station, North Shore, and on its contents being carefully examined, about 8000 cigars and a large quantity of tobacco were found to be its contents. The goods were confiscated and removed to the Custom House.

THE general meeting of the members of the Great Synagogue, called together to elect eight committeemen and one auditor, took place yesterday (Sunday) morning at the new Masonic Hall, presided over by Mr. Monts Gotthelf, the president. The ballot-box disclosed the following gentlemen elected:—Messrs. John Isaacs, Henry Solomon, Coleman Cantor, Mark Myers, Eliott Meyer, B. F. Marks, Louis Cohen, and L. R. Isaacs. For auditor: Mr. M. De Lissa, vice Mr. M. Mitchell, resigned. A hearty vote of thanks to the chairman concluded the proceedings.

A MEETING was held at Horwood's Hotel, Baulkham Hills, on Friday evening last to arrange for ploughing matches and sports in connection with the fruitgrowers of the district. Mr. John Nobbs, J.P., was in the chair, and amongst those present were Messrs. Bellamy, Horwood, Tuckwell, Stranger, and Whittaker. It was resolved to hold the sports on Wednesday, December 1, and the following gentlemen (with power to add to their number) were appointed to carry out details, viz., Messrs. James, Redden, Stranger, Whittaker, Horwood, Usher, Tamsett, Bellamy, Tuckwell, and the chairman. After the transaction of other business, the meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

THE T. S. N. Company's steamer Corinna, which arrived yesterday from Launceston, via Eden, brought 135 merino stud sheep. They are from Mr. J. Phelps' Quamby Estate, near Launceston, and are intended for that gentleman's station on the Darling River, in this colony.

THE schooner Jessie Kelly, engaged in the coasting trade, went on the rocks at the north head of Nelson's Bay on Saturday evening, and became a total wreck. The master and crew were saved. Mr. B. Byrnes, of this city, was the owner of the vessel.

THE Herald wayzegoose took place at Chowder Bay on Saturday. The arrangements made for entertaining the guests were of a satisfactory character, and the gathering was a most enjoyable one. With the exception of a number of gentlemen, who were engaged on urgent business for the office, the whole of the employees of John Fairfax and Sons were present, and they were accompanied in many cases by their wives and children. A large number of the employees went down by a special steamer at a comparatively early hour, but the majority left Circular Quay shortly before 1 o'clock. The company numbered between four and five hundred. On Chowder being reached refreshments were partaken of by the guests, after which the amusements of the day were commenced. The dancing pavilion was well patronised. Messrs. Wallace, White, and Hughes acted as M.C.'s. An attractive programme of athletic sports was provided, and was satisfactorily carried out under the supervision of Messrs. M'Donald, Ellis, M'Mahon, Goldsbrough, Hyde, Megson, Ball, M'Kenzie, and Magoveny. A quoit match was played during the day. The luncheon took place between 2 and 3 o'clock in the pavilion. The tables were laid out in a tasteful manner. Mr. James R. Fairfax presided. Amongst those present were Mr. H. C. Russell, Professor Parker, Mr. A. Nugent Robertson, and Mr. J. Reading. The toast list was very short. It included the toasts of "The Queen," "The Governor," proposed by the chairman; "John Fairfax and Sons," proposed by Mr. W. Curnow, and acknowledged by Mr. James R. Fairfax; "The Departments," proposed by Mr. E. Ross Fairfax, and responded to by Mr. F. Brower; "Absent Friends," proposed by Mr. Samuel Cook, and responded to by the chairman; "The Ladies," submitted by Dr. Garran, and responded to by Mr. Robertson.

A MEETING of the parishioners of St. Peter's, Surry Hills, was held in the building yesterday, for the purpose of devising means to raise funds for the construction of a new church. Cardinal Moran presided, and there were many clergymen and influential laymen present. Resolutions pledging those present to carry out the objects of the meeting were agreed to unanimously. A full report of the meeting appears in another column.

THE public patronage accorded to the fancy bazaar in the City Town Hall may be considered fairly proportionate to the merits of the very deserving charity—the Magdalen Asylum, conducted by the Good Samaritan nuns—to aid which the affair is being held. On Saturday the attendance was large, and the business done satisfactory, and the visitors had the pleasure of listening at intervals during the evening to some capital vocal and instrumental music, Herr Hugo Alpen acting as accompanist. We are informed that the bazaar will remain open till Saturday next, and that, in order to keep up its attractiveness, concerts will be given every evening. The erection of the new asylum at Tempe has involved the sisters of the Good Samaritan in a large debt, and it is hoped that the proceeds of the bazaar will go a good way towards removing this financial encumbrance.

WE have received from the Statistical Department a copy complete of the "Statistical Register for 1885"—a bulky volume of some 370 pages—the substance of which we have already given as the several separate parts appeared. We have had on many occasions to point out the inconvenience the public have suffered in consequence of the statistical information for one year not appearing until the end of the next, and it is to be hoped, now that we have a Government Statistician, that more promptness will be exhibited in future. Accompanying the work is a "Handbook to the Statistical Register," compiled by Mr. T. A. Coghlan, the Government Statistican, which presents the bulk of the information contained in the larger volume in a concise and compact form. The Handbook will be very valuable for reference, as it will serve as a sort of index to the larger volume.

MESSRS. HIGINBOTHAM and Robinson, map publishers of Sydney and Melbourne, have published a very useful comprehensive map of Port Phillip and its surroundings, showing the harbour and the city of Melbourne its suburbs, and the neighbouring towns. The publication was primarily designed chiefly for yachting and excursion purposes, but it has been extended in the course of its preparation in such a way as to render it an exceedingly useful guide as a general reference map. The map is neatly executed, and its compilation has evidently been a work of great care, and as it is published in pocket size, as well as a wall map, it becomes a convenient portable reference.

THE will of the late Mr. Peter Campbell, bush missionary, who was accidentally killed on the St. Kilda railway about six or seven weeks ago, has been proved in the Melbourne Supreme Court. The estate was valued at £242, but the amount liable for duty is said to be only £71 1s. With the exception of £50, bequeathed to the Children's Hospital, all the real and personal estate is left to the sister of the deceased, Georgina Janet Campbell, who is at present living in Scotland.

THE following extract from the London Times may be of interest, as enabling the public to judge the value of the information given to Mr. J. P. Abbott, and which, according to his recent speech, has effected the sudden conversion of that politician to the cause of protection:—"The evidence collected by Lord Iddesleigh's commission upon the depression of trade . . . disposes of the fallacy that foreigners prosper by skulking behind blank walls of prohibitory tariffs. . . . Investigation demonstrates that the nations which have systematically violated the principles of political economy have been more grievously afflicted than those which have obeyed them. . . . If the industries of England are to take a secondary place, the decline will be its own involuntary act. . . . Almost every witness, almost every report, declares that the fall is due to the inferiority of English to foreign technical education."

A SAD accident, resulting in the drowning of a little boy named Earnest Toms, occurred on Saturday, in a pond connected with the brickworks of Messrs. Johnson Brothers, Fitzroy-street, Marrickville. The deceased, who was seven years of age, and resided with his parents in Fitzroy-street, was playing on the brink of the waterhole with a companion named William Deeble, about his own age. They were playing see-saw on a plank which they had improvised for the purpose, when young Deeble stepped off his end, and the deceased, who was nearest the water, fell in and was drowned before assistance could be procured. The body was finally recovered and removed to the residence of the boy's parents. The city coroner was communicated with, but on hearing the circumstances of the case decided that an inquest could be dispensed with.

AT about noon on Friday a young man named Charles Doherty received severe internal injuries through being crushed between two railway trucks whilst loading them with firewood at the National Park. He was removed to the residence of his uncle, Mr. William Elliott, Rocky Point-road, Kogarah, and Dr. Read was called in. After examination, however, the medical man entertained little hope of the recovery of his patient, and on Saturday morning the unfortunate fellow, who was only 18 years of age, succumbed to his injuries. The circumstance was reported by the Newtown police to the city coroner, and a magisterial inquiry will be held by Mr. W. T. Pinhey, J.P., at the Gardeners' Arms Hotel, Rocky Point-road, this morning.

YESTERDAY morning it was reported to the Water Police that the body of a man was seen floating in the water between the Sugar Company's wharf and the steamer Western. The body was recovered by the police, and proved to be that of a man named William Devlin, who resided at Pyrmont. The city coroner was apprised of the occurrence, and an inquest will be held at the Soudan Hotel, Lower George-street, at 9.30 a.m. to-day.

A SHOCKING suicide occurred in the Richmond Hotel, Riley-street, on Saturday night or Sunday morning. At about 1.30 a.m. on Sunday the barman of the hotel, a man named George Stafford, was found lying on the floor of his bedroom with his throat cut, and a razor lying close by. He had not ceased to breathe, and Constable Enwright, who shortly afterwards arrived on the scene, conveyed him to the Sydney Hospital. Dr. Fisher, of that institution, found that the man had a fearful gash in the throat, completely severing the windpipe. He had also lost a great deal of blood. The operation of laryngotomy was performed, but without avail, for the patient died at 1.30 p.m. He was extremely violent on admission, and remained so up to the time of his death. The circumstance was reported to the city coroner, and an inquest will be held at the Assembly Hotel, Phillip-street, to-day. The deceased, it is stated, was 31 years of age, had been seven years in the colony, and was of sober habits. The circumstance of his committing the rash act is explained by those who know him by the fact that some months ago he received a blow on the head, which caused him occasionally to lose his reason.

THE following is the order of musical service at St. Andrew's Cathedral, this afternoon:—Magnificat, Arnold, in A; Nunc Dimittis, Arnold, in A; Anthem, "O taste and see how gracious the Lord is" (Sullivan).

BY a typographical error a most important word was omitted from the concluding sentence of his Honor the Primary Judge in Equity's decision in the case of "Proudfoot v. the Bank of New Zealand," reported in our issue of Saturday. The report should read thus:—"The decree would therefore have to be performed in all respects except as to the delivery of the certificate by the bank and the payment of £560, which was the consideration provided in the decree respecting such delivery." The word "except" was dropped out of the report in question.

IN a paragraph in Saturday's Herald referring to the recent changes in the council of the Melbourne University, the word "professional" was substituted for "professorial."

THE following is the report of the Prince Alfred Hospital for the week ending 20th November:—Number of in-patients at last report, 103 males, 49 females; since admitted, 27 males, 16 females; discharged, 23 males, 15 females; died, 1 male; remaining in hospital on 20th November, 106 males, 50 females. Number of out-patients treated during the week, 312; number of casualty cases treated but not admitted, 150; total, 462.

THE ANGLO-AMERICAN MAIL SERVICE.

THE CUNARD AND WHITE STAR LINES.

PROPOSALS OF THE POSTMASTER-GENERAL DECLINED.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.)

LONDON, Nov. 19.

The Times to-day publishes a paragraph in which it states that the Cunard and White Star Companies have declined the proposal of the Postmaster-General to convey the mails from Queenstown to American ports, twice weekly, at the rate of three shillings per pound for letters, and threepence per pound for newspapers, alleging as a reason that the Postal authorities wish to reserve the right to give a third weekly departure to any steamer proceeding from other ports in the United Kingdom. This, it is understood, can only apply to the North German Lloyd's Company. The Cunard and White Star Companies explain, as the reason of their refusal, that the conveyance of passengers and mails compels them to run expensive steamers at a loss during the slack season. At the same time, they have intimated that they are prepared to maintain a complete and efficient service, or none at all. The result is that, unless satisfactory arrangements are made before the 30th instant, the Cunard and White Star steamers will not call at Queenstown, and neither will consequently be available for the American mail service.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

BRISBANE, SATURDAY.

The Clerk of Petty Sessions at Geraldton has wired as follows to the Under-Secretary for Mines:—Christie Palmerston's reported find of an extensive alluvial goldfield is still causing great excitement. A steam-launch is now conveying diggers up the river as far as the Rapids, and the road is being marked thence towards Mount Bartle Frere to the goldfields. Nothing as to the richness of the field is known here yet, and considering the almost unwarrantable rush that has set in, intending visitors should await the official confirmation of existing reports. I have been occupied during the last two days in issuing miners' rights.

THE IMPERIAL JUBILEE INSTITUTE.

THE PROPOSED SITE.

PERMANENT ENDOWMENT FUND.

[BY CABLE.]
(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

LONDON, Nov 17.

The ceremony in connection with the celebration of the jubilee year of her Majesty's reign will be confined to the laying of the foundation stone of the Imperial Jubilee Institute.

The bulk of the imperishable exhibits which are to be transferred to the Institute from the Colonial and Indian Exhibition will be stored until the Institute building is ready for the reception of the exhibits.

The promoters of the Institute hope to be able to raise £1,000,000 as a fund for the permanent endowment of the Institute, and £500,000 for the building. The Chambers of Commerce of the United Kingdom are willing to raise £500,000 towards the project if the scheme embraces the proper representation of British commerce.

Nov. 19.

The Prince of Wales' Committee has proposed that if the site of the Institute be selected between Whitehall and Westminster the city scheme should be amalgamated with the scheme proposed by the Prince of Wales; but if it should be decided to erect the Institute at South Kensington, then a separate commercial museum should be established.

It has been suggested that the Australian colonies should occupy the ground floor of the Institute, and Great Britain the upper floors.

The building is estimated to cost £300,000.

(REUTER'S TELEGRAMS.)

LONDON, Nov. 19.

It is now understood that the site of the Imperial Institute will probably be selected between Whitehall and Westminster.

CASE OF STICKING-UP IN FITZROY GARDENS.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MELBOURNE, SUNDAY.

About half-past 10 to-night Lewis Thomas, a draper's assistant, aged 17, was walking through the Fitzroy Gardens, and was stopped by two men, one of whom held a revolver and told him to stand. He turned and ran towards the gates. The man fired, and the bullet passed within a few feet of the young man's head. Two policemen heard the shot, and came up to Thomas, who reported the affair. Search was made, but the police were unable to find the men. Thomas says he knows no reason why the men should attack him. The gardens are now being watched by plain-clothes constables and detectives carrying revolvers.

VICTORIA.

MELBOURNE, SUNDAY.

Admiral Tryon officially inspected the Victorian Naval Forces on Saturday. The Naval Brigade, 220 strong, were distributed among the various vessels with the permanent crews. Captain Fullerton commanded the Cerberus, Lieutenant Tickell H.M.V.S. Nelson, Commander Collins the gunboat Victoria, Lieutenant Denis the gunboat Albert, and Lieutenant Hely Hutchinson the torpedo boats, which were under steam. Admiral Tryon visited each vessel, and made a minute inspection and examination of the crews at various drills. On the conclusion of the inspection he tendered his congratulations to the Commandant, Captain Thomas, and the officers in charge for the efficiency displayed by the force.

The Premier and Admiral Tryon will have a further conference before the departure of H.M.S. Nelson regarding the naval defences of Australasia. Admiral Tryon has promised to furnish a confidential report of the defences of Victoria and the proposed improvements.

The Government have decided to comply with the request of the Prince of Wales that the Victorian exhibits at the Colonial and Indian Exhibition should be transferred to the Imperial Jubilee Institute, so far as the Government exhibits are concerned. They will defer a full answer till they have obtained the wishes of private exhibitors from this colony.

THE INTERCOLONIAL POSTAL CONFERENCE.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

MELBOURNE, SUNDAY.

The Intercolonial Postal Conference, which was convened for the purpose of considering the question of the renewal of the contracts for the European mail service was resumed at the General Post-office on Saturday. The whole of the sitting was occupied in the further consideration of the European mail service the agreement for the federal mail service adopted by the three colonies represented, and by Tasmania, Queensland, Western Australia, and New Zealand, was discussed. The delegates were unanimous in their desire to have a federal mail service as proposed, and as far as possible to adhere to the agreement. The first question to be determined was whether the tenders sent in by the Peninsular and Oriental and the Orient Companies, in response to advertisements issued by the British postal authorities, should be accepted. There was a difference of opinion in the conference at the first meeting with regard to the principle of payment by weight. After further discussion, however, it was agreed that this principle should be maintained. There is a clause in the agreement the object of which is that each of the contracting parties shall, although the mail service is organised on a federal basis, pay only for actual quantity of mail matter which it despatches, instead of paying a share, which may not be equal in proportion to the fixed subsidy. The Conference thought this would be the most satisfactory arrangement, and having determined to adhere to it, had no alternative but to resolve that the tenders sent in should not be accepted. This implied that fresh tenders should be invited as before by Great Britain on behalf of herself and contracting colonies. As, however, the Conference did not feel disposed to entertain the suggestion that the contract should be open to foreign steamship companies, it had therefore become necessary to consider in which way the agreement should be modified with the view of securing compliance with the conditions laid down. Some modifications have been made. The nature of these has not been disclosed, but apparently the main principles of the agreement are to be upheld, and the principle of payment by weight is to be insisted upon. It is considered advisable also that there should be a reduction in the duration of the contract, and that there should be greater expedition in the service of mails. Thirty-one days is deemed to be a reasonable time for the conveyance of mails from London to Adelaide. The conference agreed to make an effort to obtain a more rapid service than that tendered for by the P. and O. and Orient Companies. This is largely a question of expense, and it is stated that a very satisfactory policy will be urged by the conference. The question as to whether the service shall be from Brindisi or Naples has been left open. It is probable that the conditions of the contract, for which fresh tenders are to be called, will, with the exception stated, be very similar to those previously adopted. No agreement has yet been arrived at. The delegates are, however, perfectly unanimous, and the agreement will be concluded on the basis stated before the meeting closes. After the question of the European mail service has been disposed of, some other subjects affecting the postal arrangements of the colonies will be discussed. The Conference meets again to-morrow.

On Saturday evening the delegates were entertained at a dinner by the Premier at Scott's Hotel.

DISASTROUS PITFALL AT WALLSEND.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

NEWCASTLE, SATURDAY.

About half-past 5 last evening a disastrous pitfall took place on the top of the hill at Brookstown, Wallsend, nearly opposite the local cemetery, whereby the Exchange Hotel, the property of Mr. Joseph Longworth, was completely wrecked. It was fortunate that the mishap occurred at the hour mentioned instead of a few hours later, or more serious results would have taken place, and probably loss of life would have resulted. As it is, the pecuniary loss must be very heavy, as in addition to the loss of business, the value of the property is estimated at £1600. It is the first public-house that is met with on approaching the township from Newcastle. The building itself was a substantial two-story weatherboard structure, plastered throughout, and contained 12 rooms and the bar. That portion of the building that has fallen was only recently added to in order to comply with the Licensing Act, and the whole of the building was comparatively new, and in thoroughly good repair. The surface of the ground has subsided for a considerable distance, extending into a paddock adjacent to the house, and fully half-way across the Newcastle-road, and it appears to have gone down fully four or five feet. The portion of the building which has fallen in contained two sitting-rooms and four bedrooms. The members of the family residing in the building were 13 persons, and it will at once be seen what a panic must have resulted, if the collapse had taken place during the night. Not the slightest warning of the subsidence was given, and one of the lodgers had great difficulty in escaping; in fact the first intimation given was by the building going down, and a stampede at once took place. It is uncertain who is to blame. The fact that the property is on the boundary of the Wallsend Coal Company's land, and coal land at present being worked by Mr. A. Sneddon, renders it difficult to decide, but the subsidence of the roadway would point to the fact that probably both parties are interested. The loss to Mr. Longworth in this instance must be very great. Since Wednesday evening last the manager of the Wallsend Coal Company has had a night watchman employed in watching the road about 50 yards from the building, expecting a pitfall to take place. Some time ago the Wallsend Council were notified by the Government that the Wallsend Company had never received any permission to undermine the road, and that the road in question was solely under the council's control, and yet, in the face of this, undermining is apparently carried on. The greatest excitement prevails in the vicinity of the pitfall, and crowds of people surround the scene of the disaster.

TRADES HALL FOR THE NORTHERN DISTRICT.

[BY TELEGRAPH.]
(FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.)

NEWCASTLE, SUNDAY.

On Saturday afternoon a deputation from the board of management of the eight-hours' demonstration committee waited upon the Hon. J. Fletcher, M.L.A., Minister for Mines, at the Great Northern Hotel, for the purpose of asking him to endeavour to get a sum of money placed upon the estimates for next year towards purchasing a piece of land in Newcastle upon which to erect a trades hall for the Northern district. The deputation consisted of Mr. Thomas Miller, president; Mr. R. Goundry, vice-president; Alderman Grahame, treasurer, and Mr. Martin O'Brien.

Mr. Alderman GRAHAME explained that the committee had now £500 on hand towards the building of a hall; and if the land could be found many promises would be made, and all the working men would contribute so soon as they knew that the land for the site was provided. £6000 had been granted by the Assembly for a trades hall in Sydney, and as there were more unionists in the Newcastle district than in any other part of Australia, the deputation thought they might depend upon Mr. Fletcher's advocacy of their interest, more especially as he had voted for the grant for a trades hall in the metropolis. The speaker was convinced that the erection of a trades hall would result in great benefit to the whole community.

Mr. FLETCHER said that he at once recognised the importance and necessity for having a trades hall erected for the City of Newcastle and district. He had frequently seen the very great inconvenience that trade societies had experienced in obtaining a suitable hall in which to meet. Besides, a vote of £6000 was almost unanimously passed by the people's representatives some time ago for the erection of a trades hall in Sydney; and it was quite true, as stated by the deputation, that he had assisted, as far as he possibly could, to get that vote passed, and Mr. Copeland, mover of the motion, promised him that he would assist him to get a like sum voted for Newcastle. He might tell the deputation that a sum of money was placed upon the last estimates, and in consequence of the cry for retrenchment the Government thought it better to let the matter stand over till the next estimates, and as Cabinet Ministry promised him it should be brought forward, and he would do his best to have that promise fulfilled. If he was in the Government then, he would use his influence with his colleagues; if out of office, they would, on the reassembling of Parliament, give notice of a motion that £8000 be placed on the estimates for the purpose named. He was fully satisfied that his colleagues were in harmony with him in this movement, and that they would assist him in giving practical effect to it. It would be needless for him to go over the ground traversed by the deputation. He recognised to the fullest extent the importance of all that had been said in respect to the necessity for such a hall, and the benefit that would be likely to arise from it, both to employees and members of trades unions. It was really gratifying to mark the progress that had been made in this direction. The idea of pulling down trades unionism by counter combinations was an exploded fallacy, and he was quite sure that the oftener men met together, and discussed each others difficulties, instead of labour regarding capital as an enemy, the representatives of both would pleasantly confer together upon matters in dispute. Such meetings would be generally facilitated by the erection of a large meeting hall, and the result would be a great benefit to all classes of the community.

The Hon. G. R. Dibbs and party left Bombala by special coach early this morning, and, after lunching at Nimitybelle, arrived at Cooma in good time this evening. While at Bombala Mr. Dibbs received a telegram from the Minister for Works, authorising him to act in the matter of the site for the Cooma railway station, which is a subject of considerable interest to Cooma townspeople. This has given great satisfaction.

Shakespeare's brilliant comedy "Much Ado About Nothing" was revived at this theatre on Saturday with great success. The new Opera House was well filled, and not a point in the witty dialogue missed fire. The plot of "Much Ado About Nothing" bears considerable resemblance to the story of Ariodante and Ginevra in the "Orlando Furioso," when Polinesso, in order to revenge himself on the Princess Ginevra, who has rejected his love suit and plighted her troth to Ariodante, prevails on her attendant Dalinda to personate the princess and to appear in a balcony by moonlight while he ascends to her apartments by a ladder of ropes. A similar story was also told by Spenser in his "Fairie Queen," book II., canto IV., published in 1590. The first edition of the comedy was a quarto published in 1600, and on the authority of Stevens we learn that about May 20, 1613, Hemmings, the actor, then at the head of his Majesty's Company of players, received the sum of forty pounds with twenty pounds in addition as the king's gratuity for exhibiting "Much Ado About Nothing" and five other plays at Hampton Court Palace. This fixes the production of the comedy to those later years of competence and leisure through which, freed from the distractions of the actor's calling, if not from the cares of management, Shakespeare was able to give his best mind to his dramatic writing. These are the years to which so much of his greatest work belongs, including, among other plays, "Hamlet" in its later form, "Othello," "King Lear," "Macbeth," the three Roman plays—"The Tempest," "The Winter's Tale," and "As You Like It"—and when he wrote "Much Ado About Nothing" the dramatist was at the zenith of his power. The comedy is a play of life, as it really is—sunny to sunny natures, ever and anon clouded with trouble, but in which the pain is never allowed to preponderate over the pleasure. The loves of Hero and Claudio, with their terrible calamity and subsequent reconciliation, are used but as a back ground to set off more brightly the merrier love tale of Beatrice and Benedick. Shakespeare, in this comedy, is less indebted to contemporary writers of extraneous sources than in any other play. The characters of Beatrice and Benedick, as well as Dogberry and Verges, are his absolute creations, and neither Leonato nor Don Pedro can be traced exactly to their originals. The scenic arrangement and dressing of the comedy are admirably done at the New Opera House. The cathedral scene is a success for scenic artist and stage manager, and all the various scenes are adequate and appropriate. The comedy has been placed upon the stage with a due regard for detail, and the pains bestowed upon mise en scene and ensemble was amply recognised and rewarded by Saturday's audience. The acting throughout was fairly competent, and the Beatrice of Miss Essie Jenyns was a fine performance—the finest she has yet given in Sydney. The character is not only well within Miss Jenyns' artistic capability, but she is personally fitted for the part. She is tall, and Beatrice should be tall; a little woman could hardly have said and done such things as she says and does. Miss Jenyns has charm of manner as well as incisiveness of speech, and so has Beatrice, with whom the poinards of her tongue are half blunted by the fascination of her smile. With the memory of this artiste's Rosalind still fresh in the mind it was practically certain that she would invest the part with grace and charm, give a pleasing playfulness to the playful speeches and rise to the necessary power in the church scene. Miss Jenyns did even more, she conveyed a striking picture of Beatrice's high spirits which are the essence of the character, and without which she cannot be reproduced, and the sudden violence of her "kill Claudio," after she has heard her cousin belied, was more than impressive. The opening scene, which discloses the entrance of Leonato, Hero, Beatrice, and others, plunges an audience at once in medias res. Shakespeare's most brilliant coquette shows by her first utterance which way her thoughts are tending, and thus strikes the keynote of the comedy. Her first expression is a gibe at Benedick, and when shortly afterwards the Signior Montanto himself appears upon the scene, the war of words immediately begins. Miss Jenyns' Beatrice revels in the contempt she pours upon the sons of Adam, and Shakespeare's sparkling wit has seldom secured such an appreciative interpreter. The raillery against marriage and the wit combats with Benedick were carried off with exhilarating vivacity, so that applause and laughter inevitably followed upon both. Nor was she less effective in depicting the latent force of the character, the real Beatrice, hidden underneath the everyday venue of wit and coquetry. In one special point she deserves great commendation, the audience understood that her Beatrice loves Benedick more or less from the beginning, and this obviously is the meaning of the text. The Benedick of Mr. Holloway was a very careful performance. He spoke his lines with due emphasis, and played throughout with discretion. Miss Alice Deorwyn was less successful than usual as Hero. The poetic qualities of the part are missing from her performance. Her artifice is ten times too obvious, and on Saturday she was apt to be over conscious of herself and her audience. Neither Mr. Richard Stewart as Don Pedro, nor Mr. M'Kenzie as Don John, appear to understand either the value of Shakespeare's diction or the beauty of his poetry. There was neither dignity nor discretion in their impersonations, and all the poetry of the parts evaporated in their hands. Mr. Norman was a very creditable Claudio, and Mr. Hodson used much adroit elocution in the character of Leonato. Messrs. Charles Holloway and Gerald Dillon distinguished themselves as Dogberry and Verges. Miss Nita Steele played Balthazar, and incidental to the part sang "Sigh no more ladies" with great sweetness. "Much Ado About Nothing" was received on Saturday with every sign of satisfaction, and the revival may be chronicled as a success with the public. Miss Jenyns in particular may be congratulated for having presented in her Beatrice a histrionic picture, which is not only a faithful portrait of the original, but is equal to either her Juliet or her Rosalind, and immeasurably superior to her Galatea. Thursday next, had been set aside by Messrs. Majeroni and Wilson for the benefit of Miss Jenyns, when Romeo and Juliet will be reproduced under the patronage and in the immediate presence of his Excellency the Governor, Lady Carrington, and suite, but owing to the number of seats which have been already taken beyond the seating accommodation of the New Opera House, it has been decided to continue Miss Essie Jenyns' benefit over Friday, making it two nights instead of one. On both occasions this artiste will appear as the love-sick Maid of Verona.

THEATRE ROYAL.

Under the patronage and in the immediate presence of his Excellency the Governor, Lady Carrington, and suite, Giacommetti's historical drama, Queen Elizabeth, was reproduced at this theatre on Saturday evening. The play has been so often performed in Sydney that to dwell upon its story would be a work of supererogation. It is perhaps, now more completely staged in respect to mise en scene and ensemble than upon any previous occasion, as the stage of the Royal is sufficiently large to lend itself to the requirements of strong scenic effect. The various scenes are crowded with historical characters in gorgeous costumes, who at great length inform each other of their views and designs in regard to the questions of the epoch. The drama was received by a crowded house with great applause, and it would appear as if the success which has always attended the efforts of the Majeroni's in this revival still remained, although the scene is changed. Signora Majeroni repeated her clever and accepted impersonation of the Virgin Queen. In method it much resembles the incomparable rendering of Madame Ristori, but it possesses a charm entirely its own. All the familiar points were made, and the strong situations worked well up to. Throughout, Signora Majeroni was received with applause, and her reception must have been very gratifying to her. Signor Majeroni again appeared with the same success as the Earl of Essex, and Mr. B. N. Jones, one of the few modern actors who is not uncomfortable on the stage when playing in the costume of a past generation, was a most dignified Lord Burleigh. The rest of the cast was quite adequate. Mrs. Walter Hill appeared as Lady Burleigh, Miss Austin Elliott as Marie Lambrum and Miss Blanche Lewis as the Lady Sarah Howard. Mr. Augustus Glover undertook the character of Sir Francis Drake, Mr. Harry Douglas that of Lord Howard of Effingham, Mr. Robert Inman King James the VI, and Sir Francis Bacon was safe in the hands of Mr. Stilling Duff. The costumes and accessories were not only historically correct but even picturesque, and the grouping of the supernumeraries was an excellent piece of stage management. The revival of Giacommitti's great historical drama was most successful on Saturday, and it should have a prosperous career at the Theatre Royal.

GAIETY THEATRE.

On Saturday evening Mr. W. E. Sheridan, the American tragedian, appeared at this theatre after an absence of four years as King Lear, in Shakespeare's play of the same name. In this drama the poet has for a certain purpose travelled back into the ages of darkness and barbarity. He has consciously quitted the light that surrounded with more or less splendour his own times and passed into a land where the rays of civilisation were only just beginning to glimmer, when the passions of men yet raged in all their violence untamed and unshackled, and nature still reigned wild, unredeemed, ferocious. Hazlitt says: "It is then the best of all Shakespeare's play, for it is the one in which he was the most earnest. He was here fairly caught in the web of his own imagination. The passion which he has taken as his subject is that which strikes its root deepest into the human heart, of which the bond is the hardest to be unloosed, and the cancelling and tearing to pieces of which gives the greatest revulsion to the frame. This depth of nature, this force of passion, this tug and war of the elements of our being, this firm faith in filial piety, and the giddy anarchy and whirling tumult of the thoughts at finding this prop failing it, the contrast between the fixed, immovable basis of natural affection, and the rapid, irregular starts of imagination suddenly wrenched from all its accustomed holds and resting places in the soul—this is what Shakespeare has given and what nobody else but he could give." But, as a rule, "Lear" is, perhaps, the least popular of the great tragedies though this is probably due to imperfect representation. The Gaiety was, however, well filled on Saturday evening, and the Lear of Mr. Sheridan was accorded a very enthusiastic welcome. It is a performance displaying all the resources of the actor's art in combination with very fine natural gifts. Miss Louise Davenport doubled Cordelia and the Fool with ordinary success, and the company were well received. The scenery has been specially painted for Mr. Sheridan's series of Shakespearian revivals, and the costumes and accessories are historically correct. If the attitude of the audience on Saturday evening was any adequate guide to the popular feeling of Sydney playgoers Mr. Sheridan has made an artistic success in the present, which should prove a financial one in the future.

ROYAL STANDARD THEATRE.

The new and original melodrama "The Star of the South" was produced for the first time in the colonies at this theatre on Saturday. Mr. Henry Pettitt, the author of the play in question—and part author of "The World" and "Human Nature," the two most successful melodramas of modern times—knows exactly what ingredients are necessary for the turning out of a successful piece. The plot of "The Star of the South" is neither particularly new nor peculiarly true, and it turns on the adventures of Walter Mason and his sweetheart, Rose Danby. The story starts in South Africa, where Rose appears journeying after her sweetheart, and to avoid being recognised dresses in male attire, impersonating a boy. Frank Mason is the chief person in a company of miners who have just discovered a diamond worth some thousands. Mason, with the consent of his partners, sells the stone for a fair price to a merchant, but his colleagues determine to have both ducats and diamond, even if to accomplish the end they have to murder the dealer. The villains are once baffled in their scheme by Mason; then determined not to be defeated, they deliberately go to the merchant's house, and this time are foiled by Frank, who obtains the stone after the gang have departed leaving the diamond-dealer for dead. Mason, to whom he restores it, refuses to hand it over to Lena, the daughter of the deceased, and departs to England with Frank in the Bosphorus. Walter is determined to give up mining and return to his sweetheart, but his quondam companions again discover that he has the precious stone in his possession. His life is once more in danger, but Frank, by a skilful coup de main, compasses the death of the chief villain, who is shot instead of Mason. The Bosphorus is wrecked on the Goodwin Sands, and this sensational scene is very well worked indeed. Mason is rescued from the wreck, when floating alone on a raft, and when landed in England discovers Rose's masquerading. The diamond merchant returns to England safe and sound, Mason restores to him the innocent cause of so much crime, and the drama ends happily. The Walter Mason of Mr. Dampier was a good melodramatic performance. Messrs. Harry, Stoneham and Boothman make something out of the two stereotyped villains. Mr. Harry Leston was quaint as Fritz, and his songs and dances were well received. Miss Lilly Dampier doubled the parts of Frank and Rose, playing with force and discretion; and Miss Katherine Russell pleased her audience as Lena Brock. The other characters were adequately sustained by the Standard Company, the scenery was excellent, and the melodrama was received with great approval. On Friday, November 26, will be produced, for one night only, Lord Lytton's ever-popular play "The Lady of Lyons." Miss Dampier will appear, for the first time upon any stage, as Pauline Des Chappelles to the Claude Melnotte of Mr. Dampier.

THE SATURDAY EVENING PROMENADE CONCERT.

Little more than 50 years ago Meyerbeer's grand opera, "The Huguenots," was delighting the people of Paris, and about the same time Michael Balfe had achieved a brilliant success in London by the production of "The Siege of Rochelle." The former work is still fresh as when first heard, the music worthily and graphically embodying a picture of French history in the most glowing colours, interesting alike in its dramatic, chivalrous, and religious aspect; the latter is almost forgotten. The introduction of the overture on Saturday evening was, however, particularly apropos, when at another place of amusement in the town the English history of the same period was placed before the public in most picturesque and imposing form. The orchestra in this were fortunate in having the music scored expressly to suit the instruments in the band, and as some weeding of the players has been judiciously effected, there was an intelligent and highly agreeable interpretation. The scoring was done by Mr. J. Devlin, the bandmaster of the Naval Brigade, who has most successfully accomplished his end, and the work will well bear repetition. The orchestral number which opened the second part was a selection from "Luisa Miller," Verdi's setting of Schiller's mournfully pathetic drama, "Cabale und Liebe." This opera shares with "La Forza del Destino" the distinction of being a failure; yet, like its companion, the opera contains some good music. In this arrangement several solo instrumentalists had opportunities for special display, notably Mr. M'Mahon, who had a prominent part. There were two or three fine melodies in the selection, which was remarkably well played. Mr. Hallewell, whose health seems now to be so rapidly improving that without a relapse he may soon regain his former vigour and musically exercise the old power over his audience, gave a grand rendering of Elliott's fine song, "Hybrias, the Cretan," a graphic setting of good words which at once arrests the attention, and one marvels that it is not oftener heard. "The Leather Bottel" gave the popular basso a good opportunity for showing the humorous side of his art. Mr. Hallewell was recalled after each song. Mrs. Kate Atkinson was unfortunate in having the patter of the rain as an extra accompaniment; this materially interfered with the effect of "There is no home like my ain," a song composed by the great singer, Malibran. Mrs. Atkinson's voice is not very powerful, and scarcely availed to make her second song, "The Harp that once through Tara's Halls," effective in the building; those persons who were near the singer applauded warmly. Mme. Rosalie Merz chose an aria from Meyerbeer's last opera, "L'Africaine." The music requires an educated singer, and the vocalist interpreted it well, sang correctly, and as one familiar with her work. One of the tests of a cultured vocalist, a good shake, was most satisfactorily given. An occasional inclination to sing sharp was the only drawback, and this evidently arises from a nervous anxiety to keep up to the pitch. "Sing on, sweet bird," one of Mr. Alfred Plumpton's pretty songs, does not suit Mme Merz's style so well as operatic music. The first selection, though announced with its Italian title, was sung in German. Mme. Merz was recalled and bowed her thanks. Mr. J. Lemmon, the new flautist, who appeared in Sydney for the first time, is a native of Ballarat, but has resided chiefly in Adelaide, studied music and the flute enthusiastically, and took lessons whenever an opportunity was afforded. His tone is pure, his technique good, and he is certainly an elaborate executant. Though not a Radcliffe, Mr. Lemmon is, so far as can be judged from one hearing, superior to any resident flautist of Sydney. The second solo showed his capabilities far more than the first. The Capriccio abounds in technical difficulties which were thoroughly surmounted. The first, a fantasia on Welsh airs, was much to the taste of the audience; the player declined the encore. The great treat of the evening was M. Kowalski's pianoforte playing. The first selection—Chopin's Polonaise in A flat (op. 61)—is one of the most chivalrous in character, and in the left-hand figure it is easy to supply a mental picture of horses prancing. There is a romantic glow about this polonaise which carries the listener with delight through every bar. M. Kowalski interpreted it admirably. The second solo, the dashing Marche Hongroise, splendidly played, roused the audience to unwonted enthusiasm, and an encore could not be avoided. The re-demand was "The Bells of Fribourg," one of the player's recent compositions, which was very welcome to the public, though the polonaise artistically is far above the number which evoked the demonstration. The audience was larger than at any previous concert, and the execution of the programme good. The orchestra is much improved. The rain had apparently a depressing influence on the audience, who were scarcely as demonstrative as usual.

This evening will be a grand fashionable night at the Academy of Music, under the patronage of the Mayor of Sydney, the occasion being the benefit of Miss Kate Leete (Mrs. Harry Rickards), previous to her departure for England. The programme will comprise the Musical Vaudeville, "On Guard," supported by Mr. Harry Rickards, Miss Kate Leete, Miss Fanny Sarony, Miss Ada Juneen, Miss Nita Franks, Miss Mabel Tracey, and Messrs. Sullivan and Cadzow. Miss Kate Leete has made herself a great favourite with Sydney audiences during the visits of the Rickards-Leete combination to this city, and should secure a good house on the special night.

There will be a complete change of programme at the Alhambra this evening. The first part of "The Alhambra Hunt Club Picnic" will be retained, but new songs, dances, and speciality business will be introduced by Miss Ida Francis, Miss Nina Tulloch, Messrs. Fanning, Warner, and the Alhambra Company.

An acrobat, calling himself Alexander Blondin, will perform in the open air at Ultimo this evening, on the high wire and trapeze.

The barque Spartan, flying the stars and stripes, entered the heads at about 6 o'clock yesterday afternoon, in tow of the Irresistible, and, after being passed by the port health officer, came up to an anchorage in Neutral Bay. The Spartan was built at Bath, Maine, some eight years back, and during the past two years has been engaged in the trade between San Francisco and Hongkong. She has the true Yankee characteristics, and in every respect is a fitting representative of the merchant navy of the States, being very strongly built, possessing fine lines, with good beam, and being, as with most American vessels, handsomely masted. The Spartan hails from Bath, Maine, where she was built, and is owned by her builder, Mr. Harmer, and her commander, Captain Henry Cairns, who has her in beautiful order throughout. The Spartan is from San Francisco, and has made the voyage in 49 days, showing that she may well be classed with the "heelers;" and Captain Cairns states that he fully anticipated reaching Sydney in 45 days, but owing to the wind, instead of being from N.E., as he expected when reaching the coast, being light and variable, he was delayed in getting into port. The Spartan sailed from San Francisco with a full cargo of salmon, timber, &c., at 4 p.m. on October 2, with fresh N.W. winds, and afterwards had splendid winds from N. to N.E., with fine clear weather, till reaching lat. 12° N., but there was then a change to light variable winds, and owing to these the barque took five days to reach lat. 7° N. Strong winds from S.E. to S.W. followed till October 19, when the wind settled into the S.E. trades. The Spartan crossed the Equator on October 22 in long. 146° W., 19½ days out, and had strong N.E. winds, with a strong westerly current, down to lat. 24° S. and 165° W., when the wind set in from S.S.E. again. Crossing the meridian of long. 180°, the Spartan met with fresh S.S.E. winds to long. 160° E., and fresh easterly winds and heavy rain thence till November 18, when she was assailed by a strong variable gale, accompanied with very heavy rain. Port Stephens light was sighted at 10 p.m. on the 19th inst., distant about 20 miles, and variable winds, with very heavy rain, followed almost up to port.

The steamer Australian crossed the Clarence Bar at 3.45 p.m. on the 20th instant, and entered the Heads at 8 p.m. on the 21st, having experienced moderate to fresh southerly winds, with a cross sea, throughout. Cargo: 520 bags maize, 4 hides, 3 pigs, 10 coops poultry, 39 cases eggs, 582 bunches bananas, 1560 sacks potatoes, 355 bags sugar, 545 pieces cedar, and sundries.

The steamship Tannadice, of the E. and A. S. S. Company's fleet, arrived on Saturday evening from Hongkong, via ports, with mails, passengers and cargo, and anchored in Watson's Bay for medical inspection. This took place yesterday morning, and proving satisfactory, the Tannadice came up to the company's wharf, Miller's Point. The Tannadice brings a number of saloon passengers, besides 97 Europeans in the steerage from Port Darwin, disappointed diggers from the Kimberley goldfields; and all have apparently been well treated on board by Captain Craig and his officers; indeed, the reputation the ship had under Captain Green seems to have been fully maintained. The Tannadice arrives in her usual good order. Mr. M'Arthur is still chief officer, Mr. Jeffery second, and Mr. Ramsay third, and Mr. Dick continues to discharge the duties of chief engineer. The Tannadice left Hongkong at 3.10 p.m. on October 28, arrived at Macao same evening, and after receiving on board 653 boxes opium for Australian and New Zealand ports, left again on the following day at 12.30 p.m. After rounding the N.E. head of Taman she met with a freshening N.E. wind and rising sea. Strong N.E. monsoon, with high sea, followed across the China Sea, and fine weather and light winds from Cabra to Port Darwin, which was reached on the 8th instant. The voyage was resumed next day, and the Tannadice called at Thursday Island on the 12th, Cooktown on the 14th, Townsville on the 15th, and arrived at Brisbane on the 18th. After landing the mails, passengers, and cargo, the Tannadice left again at 11 p.m. same date, and arrived as stated. She had moderate to fresh head winds and squally weather from Thursday Island till arrival. The Tannadice's cargo for this port consists of large lines of rice, sugar, matting, chairs, opium, &c. She has also similar cargo for Melbourne, Adelaide, Hobart, Launceston, and New Zealand ports.

The steamer Rotomahana left Auckland at 7 p.m. on the 16th instant, and called at Russell next day for coaling purposes, leaving at 2.30 p.m.; passed the Three Kings at 1 a.m. on the 18th; entered Sydney Heads at noon on the 21st, and moored at the New Zealand Wharf at 1 p.m. Experienced light northerly winds for two days afterwards, fresh southerly winds and dull weather to arrival.

The steamer Fiona, which arrived from Lauthala Bay, Fiji, on Friday night, was granted pratique on Saturday morning, and came up to a berth at the company's wharf, Johnston's Bay.

The P. and O. Company's R.M.S. Shannon, from London, via ports, with mails, passengers, and cargo, arrived at Melbourne on Saturday.

The R.M.S. Cuzco, of the Orient line, took her departure for London, via Melbourne and Adelaide, on Saturday afternoon, with passengers and cargo. The passenger list was a small one, but the cargo was large and valuable, and included 2072 bales wool, and 1000 carcases of mutton in the refrigerating chamber. The Cuzco, which was in very fine order throughout, cast off from the buoy punctually at 1 p.m., and 40 minutes later rounded South Head. Yesterday she passed Gabo Island at 8.55 a.m., and is due at Melbourne to-day.

WRECK OF THE SCHOONER JESSIE KELLY.

A telegram was received in town yesterday stating that the well-known coasting schooner Jessie Kelly had gone on the rocks at the North Head of Nelson's Bay at 6 o'clock on Saturday afternoon, and become a total wreck. The disaster occurred while the vessel was attempting to cross out. The Jessie Kelly was coal laden, and had been windbound in Nelson's Bay since Wednesday last. The master and crew were saved. The telegram added that the steamer Kingsley had gone to her assistance. The Jessie Kelly was a wooden vessel of 145 tons register, her principal dimensions being:—Length 103 feet, breadth 21 feet 2-10ths, and depth 11 feet. She was built at Auckland in 1866, and was owned in this city by Mr. Bernard Byrnes, coal merchant, who had the misfortune to lose the Falcon some time ago. The Jessie Kelly saw a great deal of varied service before she was placed in the coal trade, and though 20 years old she was a staunch, well-found craft.

In the list of stations the column headed W.T. gives the state of the weather at 9 a.m., b standing for blue sky; c, detached clouds; d, drizzling rain; f, fog; g, gloomy; h, hazy; m, misty; n, frosty; o, overcast; p, passing showers; r, rain; s, snow; t, thunder; u, threatening. The next column, M'x gives the maximum temperature for previous 24 hours. M'n the corresponding minimum temperature; r'n, the rain for the previous 24 hours. The symbols used in the map are explained on the margin. At each coast station the wind symbol is placed like a vane pointing to the direction from which the wind is coming. A clear circle with it means fine weather; a circle with bar, cloudy weather; and a black spot, raining. Next to this symbol are placed figures denoting the number of miles the wind is moving per hour; next, a symbol showing the state of the sea; and, lastly, figures denoting the shade temperature at 9 a.m. The barometer curve shows the state of barometers round the coast from Perth to Cooktown:—Pt, Perth; Ay, Albany; Ea, Eucla; CB, Cape Borda; A, Adelaide; Ro, Robe; P, Portland; M, Melbourne; W P, Wilson's Promontory; Go, Gabo; E, Eden; Ma, Moruya; C G Jervis Bay; Wg, Wollongong; S, Sydney; N, Newcastle; P M, Port Macquarie; C, Clarence River; B, Brisbane; R, Rockhampton; Ct, Cooktown. Head Office: 309, PITT-STREET, SYDNEY.

Authorised Capital £100,000
Paid-up Capital 20,000
Reserve Fund 40,000

NEW ISSUE of SHARES. IMPORTANT to INVESTORS.

In view of the rapid growth of the Company's business, and the fact that there is now an ample field for the profitable employment of money, the Directors have decided to increase the capital by the issue of 20,000 new shares at such a premium as will be fair both to old and new shareholders.

The price has been fixed at £3 10s per share, which will give a present return of £7 2s 10d per cent. certain, with all the prospective advantages which must accrue from the constantly increasing profits.

As the premiums will be carried to the Reserve Fund the new issue, while increasing the paid-up capital to £40,000, will swell the Reserve Fund to £90,000.

The security to new shareholders is beyond dispute, as the RESERVE FUND alone on the completion of the new issue will represent £2 5s per share, and the estimated profit from unsold land at least an equal amount.

The dividends paid to original shareholders have been at the rate of 25 per cent. per annum.

The Reserve Fund has at the same time rapidly accumulated.

The successful operations of the Company ensure an INCREASED RATE OF DIVIDEND and still larger accumulations to reserve in the future than in the past; hence it is anticipated that the MARKET VALUE of the shares in a very short time will be at least £5 per share.

As a consequence of the smallness of the paid-up capital and magnitude of the Reserve Fund, the average cost of money to the Company has been less than of any similar Company in New South Wales, notwithstanding that the Company has paid 1½ per cent bonus to depositors in addition to paying the highest current rates on deposits.

The policy of the Directors is to establish a permanent and successful business on a sound financial basis, which shall insure the safety of the investment and the best interests of the shareholders.

The success of this Company is unexampled, no other similar institution having approached it either in the proportion of Reserve to paid-up Capital, the yearly increase in the amount of deposits, the low average cost of its money, and the rapid extension of its business.

The new shares are confidently recommended as a splendid investment to capitalists and a highly favourable opportunity to the thrifty to make the best and most profitable use of their savings.

For further information and forms of application, apply to H. G. SWYNY, Managing Director.

UNIVERSAL PROVIDERS. UNIVERSAL PROVIDERS.

UNIVERSAL PROVIDERS, HOUSE FURNISHERS, CLOTHIERS, MANCHESTER WAREHOUSEMEN, FAMILY DRAPERS, and VENDORS OF ALL THINGS NEEDFUL AND NICE.

Of all the departments in our establishment, we suppose none have been so much affected by THE ENGLISH COST PRICE EXCITEMENT of the last few weeks as OUR MANCHESTER DEPARTMENT.

Nor can this be wondered at. The opportunity was too good, the chance was too rare, the gain was too great, for PRUDENT SYDNEY HOUSEWIVES Not to buy as largely as they could. Such a run upon FLANNELS, such a demand for CALICOES, such a longing for LINENS has never been known to us before, and we cannot help asking ourselves: Where have all these thousands and thousands of yards of household stuffs been disposed of, for such an output was never known before since Sydney was the Queen City of the South and since our little store was the wonderful palace it now is.

We suppose it has been the ENGLISH COST PRICE that has done it; we know of no other reason; we imagine that such is the solution of the mystery; we are almost confident that it all turns upon the simple fact that for the past few weeks everything that has been sold at our MANCHESTER COUNTER has been sold at ENGLISH COST PRICE.

And we wish to inform our friends that there is a chance for them still, that the goose that lays the golden eggs is not yet killed, that the lucky bag is still open, that there's many a favourable turn yet in the wheel of fortune, that the old flag is still nailed to the mast, that there's no surrender, and that it's ENGLISH COST PRICE STILL.

DO YOU WANT TO BUY SHEETS?
You do, do you? Then look at this list, and bear in mind that the prices quoted are ENGLISH COST—that is, less than your cousins on the other side of the water pay for theirs.

READY-MADE SHEETS—
For Single Beds, Plain or Twilled, 5s 11d, 6s 9d per pair.
For Double Beds, Plain or Twilled, 7s 11d, 8s 9d, 10s 6d per pair.
For Extra Double Beds, Plain or Twilled, 9s 11d, 11s 6d, 13s 6d, per pair.

Can you do with some LINEN SHEETS or some PILLOW or BOLSTER CASES? Can you, as an intelligent citizen, say, that at English Cost you can't? Take the beam out of your eye, read what follows, remembering that the figures before you faithfully represent ENGLISH COST.
